that it is presumed that knowledge so acquired was prejudicial.⁶² A new trial will not be awarded if the party complaining has participated in the misconduct of the juror,⁶³ and the action of the trial court in passing on a motion for a new trial will not be reviewed save for an abuse of discretion.⁶⁴

9. Maintaining Secrecy of Deliberations and as to Verdicts. Jurors should not lounge in open windows, where their actions can be observed, or conduct their deliberations in such a manner that they can be overheard by other persons.⁶⁵

For a juror to make known the nature of the verdict agreed upon before it is returned in open court while an impropriety, is not a ground for a new trial.⁶⁶ The same is true, if it is a sealed verdict which is involved.⁶⁷ It is equally improper for jurors to disclose to others how the jury is divided, before any verdict has been agreed upon.⁶⁸

10. Use of Intoxicating Liquors.—a. In General.—The use by jurors of intoxicating liquors during the trial is a practice which is strongly condemned by the courts,⁶⁹ and constitutes misconduct on

[a] A presumption of prejudice is raised by a showing that a juror was intoxicated during the progress of the trial, and the burden is upon the successful party to rebut it. Gamble v. State, 44 Fla. 429, 33 So. 471, 103 Am. St. Rep. 150, 60 L. R. A. 547, 1 Ann. Cas. 285; State v. Salverson, 87 Minn. 40, 91 N. W. 1; State v. Madigan, 57 Minn. 425, 59 N. W. 490.

[b] The consumption of four or five bottles of whiskey by three jurors is such a use of intoxicating liquors as to vitiate a verdict. March v. State, 44 Tex. 64.

[c] The mere fact that ardent spirits in sufficient quantities to produce intoxication were conveyed by the bailiff into the juryroom is sufficient to set aside the verdict, but where it affirmatively appears that such liquor was only used by one juror who was sick and he was not intoxicated the verdict will not be disturbed. Pope v. State, 36 Miss. 121.

to submission of the case.⁷⁵ If the liquor be used in a moderate quantity, for medicinal purposes, no prejudice follows,⁷⁶ though even in such a case an order of court should be obtained authorizing them to be furnished with the same.⁷⁷

On appeal, the action of the lower court, in passing on the prejudicial effect of such misconduct on the part of a juror, will seldom be disturbed.⁷⁸

b. *Furnished by Other Persons.*⁷⁹—Where intoxicating liquors are furnished by the prevailing party or his representatives, the verdict will ordinarily be reversed and a new trial granted irrespective of whether the verdict was affected thereby,⁸⁰ though under some authoradoption of code as to the use of intoxicants by juror.

[a] Consent of Counsel.—Where a juror requested permission to use such liquor as might be required for his health and counsel for accused consented thereto in open court as did the prosecuting attorney who suggested that other jurors who needed it might also drink liquor, the objection to such drinking by the jurors cannot be sustained unless it is shown that the indulgence was grossly abused and operated injuriously to the prisoners. *United States v. [a] Reason for the Rule.—The reading by a juror of newspaper accounts and comments prejudicial to the defendant vitiates the verdict because they are ex parte arguments and presentations of the case made out of court, not under oath, irresponsibly made and not answerable by defendant by argument or evidence. State v. Jackson, 9 Mont. 508, 24 Pac. 213.

[a] Objections to Repeated Publications.—Where it appears that counsel had made proper objections to the publication of certain articles published, and the publications continued from day to day, it was not incumbent on counsel to repeat the objections to the later articles. Meyer v. Cadwalader, 49 Fed. 32.

[b] In order to preserve one's rights to assign as error for a new trial the publication of prejudicial accounts in a newspaper, it is not necessary to have the publishers cited before the court for contempt where it is doubtful that the court could so punish when no continuance had been asked because of the publication. Morse v. Montana Ore-Purchasing Co., 105 Fed. 337.

12. Misconduct in Returning Verdict.—Haste in returning a verdict is not improper, unless accompanied by an apparent disregard of duty on the part of jurors.⁵ Making incorrect and untrue answers to special interrogatories is not "misconduct" as that term is used in the statute specifying the grounds of new trial.⁶ But for a jury, which has been given leave to return a sealed verdict, to seal a pretended verdict that they agreed to disagree, is misconduct which will vitiate any subsequent verdict reached after they have reassembled.⁷

13. Effect of Misconduct.—a. In General.—Misconduct on the part of jurors is not, in most jurisdictions, ordinarily presumed to have caused injury to the defeated party,⁸ and a new trial will not be awarded unless prejudice to him is shown to have followed.⁹

[a] Effect of Objection to Discharge of Jury.—Where objection was taken that a juror had brought into the jury-room a newspaper containing a reference to the trial and the court offered to discharge the jury and draw a new one, to which counsel replied he would except to any such move, he is deemed to have waived his objection. State v. Brown, 7 Ore. 186.

[a] Impatience and haste of individual juror does not constitute misconduct: "The case is in no wise different from many others where jurors, on account of engagements of various kinds, are impatient and restless on account of the jury's failure to agree upon a verdict and zealously and earnestly desire to be at other places and under different surroundings. If the mere fact that the juror was apprehensive that the deliberations of the jury would keep him beyond the time when he could prepare for his daughter's marriage would be a sufficient reason for declaring a mistrial, then the floodgate for numberless motions for mistrial would certainly be open in this state. While we sympathize very much with a juror who should be caught at a time like this in the discharge of a public duty, his mind is no more disturbed than those of many other men who have been required to discharge public duties at times when so doing seriously interferes with other engagements." Morrison v. Dickey, 122 Ga. 417, 50 S. E. 178.

More irregularities which it is shown could not have affected the verdict do not afford sufficient ground for a new trial;¹⁰ if, however, the misconduct was of such a character as to indicate that injury might reasonably be inferred to have resulted, it will be held to be prima facie prejudicial,¹¹ and, in the absence of a counter showing, a new trial will be awarded.¹² Gross misconduct has sometimes, on the ground of public policy, been held to require a new trial even though

[a] "But what is prejudice? Can the court say that where the jury misbehave, so that the losing party has not had a fair and impartial trial, there is no prejudice because the court may be of opinion that the verdict is right? By no means; because the losing party is not bound to accept the judgment of the court: he is entitled to the verdict of an impartial jury. . . . The true idea of prejudice in this connection was this: Was the misbehaviour of the juror such as to make it probable that his mind was influenced by it so as to render him an unfair and prejudiced juror?" *Pool v. improper for the jury itself to conduct such experiments surreptitiously and out of the presence of the court,²² or for individual jurors to make tests of any sort,²³ and it is equally improper and amounts to a contempt of court for counsel to perform any act with an exhibit, during a recess of court and in the presence of some or all of the jurors which the court has ordered not to be done.²⁴ While viewing the premises the jury must closely observe the directions of the court and should not undertake to make investigations on its own part.²⁵

2. After Submission of the Case.—a. In General.—It is not permissible for the jury to receive evidence out of court and any experiment or test which amounts to a reception of evidence is misconduct on the part of the jury which calls for a new trial.²⁶ But

Wash.—See State v. Baker, 67 Wash. 595, 122 Pac. 335. (2) But the practice of permitting jurors to taste liquors is not approved by all courts. State v. Eldred, 8 Kan. App. 625, 56 Pac. 153 (not reversible error in absence of an objection); State v. Lindgrove, 1 Kan. App. 51, 41 Pac. 688; Com. v. Brelsford, 161 Mass. 61, 36 N. E. 677. [b] "There are three channels through which tribunals of fact receive evidence, namely, inspection, documents, and oral testimony. No jury ever decided any controverted question of fact without using one or more of their five senses. The senses of hearing and sight are used in every case for more purposes than that of simply seeing the witnesses and hearing their words. Through these senses impressions are made upon the minds of the jurors which cause them to accept as true, or reject as false the statements made by the several witnesses. Thus the exercise of these senses, on the part of the jurors, affects their verdicts. But this does not make them witnesses in the case. They have simply tested the credibility of the witnesses by the personal experience and other observations of the jurors. . . . In this case jurors were permitted to smell the contents of the bottle offered in evidence, to enable them to decide as to whether the prosecuting witness had told the truth about its being whiskey. By this the jurors did not learn any facts independent of the evidence; they simply tested the facts in evidence by the use of one of their senses." Reed v. Territory, 1 Okla. [a] Testing Opium.—In Wilson v. United States, 116 Fed. 484, the defendants were indicted for smuggling "opium prepared for smoking purposes." It was held error to instruct the jury that from a can of opium

it is not every examination or inspection of articles introduced in evidence which the court has allowed the jury to take with them to the juryroom which constitutes an unwarranted experiment.²⁷ Any use of such exhibits within the line and scope of the evidence and to enable the jury the better to weigh it, is permissible.²⁸

b. Tasting Liquor.—After submission of the case it is improper for jurors to taste liquor, an exhibit in the case, for the purpose of determining its nature, quality, or intoxicating effect,²⁹ though by some authorities, the practice is permitted.³⁰ But they may handle the bottle and smell of it.³¹

c. Examining Clothing.—Articles of clothing introduced in evidence may be used for the purpose³² for which they were intro-introduced in evidence, they could take some of its contents, and "have a piece of candle in your juryroom and test it by taking some of it on a piece of silver or stick and see whether it will burn or not." "

[b] To determine how far voices could be heard through a wooden door and partition, jurors sent the constable out of their room, talked louder than commonly, and asked him if he could hear. "This mode of arriving at the truth of testimony cannot be permitted; it is too vague and uncertain. A different intonation of voice, a difference in the structure of the rooms, would destroy its virtue as a test; and besides, they had to take the word of the constable as to the fact whether they were heard." *Jim v. They may carry out experiments within the lines of offered evidence; but if their experiments shall invade new fields, and they shall be influenced in their verdict by discoveries from such experiments which will not fall fairly within the scope and purview of the evidence, then manifestly, the jury has been itself taking evidence without the knowledge of either party, evidence which it is not possible for the party injured to meet, answer, or explain." *Higgins v. f. Admonition by Court.—Whenever an exhibit is sent to the juryroom which from its very nature and from the character of the issues in the case, might be subjected by the jury to improper use, the court should carefully instruct the jury as to the use they may make of it.³⁷

J. CONSIDERATION OF THE VERDICT. — 1. Place.³⁸ — When the jury is ready to retire, such accommodations should be furnished it as will enable it to conduct its deliberations in privacy and secrecy.³⁹ It is not always possible, however, to provide the jury with quarters fully adapted to its use,⁴⁰ and, where no improper intercourse with other persons is shown to have taken place, the fact that the room in which the jury was kept did not afford it entire seclusion does not adversely affect the verdict.⁴¹ There is no rule which requires them to leave the courtroom and they may, if they desire, agree upon a verdict without leaving the jurybox.⁴² It is not improper, where circumstances require it, to leave the jury in a courtroom in which are left state reports, statutes, and other customary furnishings.⁴³

2. Time Spent in Deliberation. — A jury is not required to spend any particular space of time in deliberation before agreeing upon a verdict,⁴⁴ and the fact that a verdict is returned after a very brief deliberation is no ground for impeaching it;⁴⁵ and in some jurisdictions a verdict concurred in by less than the total number of jurors is permissible after a certain period of deliberation.⁴⁶ A verdict will stand although returned after the court had authorized the separation of the jury,⁴⁷ even if this fact had been concealed from them.⁴⁸

3. Manner of Deliberating.—Jurors are to be left to a consideration of their verdict in such a manner as seems best to them,⁴⁹ but the adoption of unreasonable restrictions on the expression of opinions by the various jurors is improper.⁵⁰ The jurors may properly discuss the case in small groups;⁵¹ the fact that the jury discussed a part of the testimony before the evidence was all in, while a practice not approved, does not call for a reversal.⁵² A jurymen may

[b] "Their deliberations are not necessarily confined to discussions with each other. While such discussions are essential to the proper consideration of matters concerning which there is a difference of opinion, a juror may deliberate as wisely and to as good effect when he is considering and weighing the evidence in his own mind, as when he is pressing his conclusions upon his fellows. Because jurors are not debating, it does not follow that they are not deliberating; and it is not for the court to say that they are deliberating at one moment; and are not deliberating at some other moment." In re Hurlbut's Estate, 126 Minn. 180, 148 N. W. 51.

[a] Parliamentary procedure is out of place in the jury room. "This seems to have been an arbitrary mode of procedure. A jury, and each member thereof, should be absolutely free to express their opinions of the case. It occurs often, perhaps generally, that there are men upon the jury of the soundest judgment and good sense who are yet unfamiliar with rules of debate, and unaccustomed to rise in their places and address the chairman of a meeting in a formal manner and according to parliamentary rules. Such men might be more or less intimidated by such a rule in the jury room as is here objected to." Hutchins v. State, 140 Ind. 78, 39 N. E. 243.

4. Matters To Be Considered.—A jury is to be guided wholly by the evidence produced during the trial,⁵⁴ with the inferences which may properly be drawn therefrom,⁵⁵ and the law, as stated by the court.⁵⁶ The consideration by them of matters not regularly in evidence, is improper,⁵⁷ but where in the course of the trial it appears that the jury has been considering facts not in evidence and the court thereupon charges them that they must decide the case solely on the evidence adduced at the trial, the irregularity will be cured.⁵⁸ And in any case the complaining party must make the facts appear,⁵⁹ and to require a new trial they must be such as probably influenced the verdict.⁶⁰ The jury should not speculate,⁶¹ nor resort to conjecture,⁶² in determining the issues in the case.⁶³ Being sole judges of the credibility of the witnesses, jurors may properly discuss their testimony in the juryroom.⁶⁴ The disputes or strictures of counsel should be disregarded,⁶⁵ and the effect of the verdict should not be considered.⁶⁶ Conflicting evidence should be reconciled, if possible,⁶⁷

but if this is impossible the verdict must be for the party in whose favor the evidence preponderates,⁶⁸ credit being given to that testimony which is most reliable and most entitled to belief.⁶⁹ The actions and demeanor of an accused person may be considered in weighing his testimony.⁷⁰ All the evidence should be considered whether it be oral or documentary,⁷¹ direct or circumstantial.⁷² The jury cannot arbitrarily disregard relevant and competent testimony.⁷³

5. Facts Personally Known to Jurors.—a. In General.—At the early common law jurors were selected for the peculiar personal knowledge they had of the facts involved in the case and their verdict was based largely upon this personal knowledge.⁷⁴ Under modern conditions, however, a verdict must be based solely on the evidence introduced in the case and the personal knowledge of the jurors as to the matters and facts involved will not be allowed to enter into their deliberations upon the verdict,⁷⁵ whether such knowledge be

[a] "The jury were at liberty to exercise their own common sense, and to use the knowledge acquired by their observation and experience in everyday life in solving the question." Deans v. Wilmington & W. Ry. Co., 107 N. C. 686, 12 S. E. 77, 22 Am. St. Rep. 902.

[b] Jurors are not "expected to lay aside matters of common knowledge or their own observation and experience of the affairs of life, but, on the contrary, to apply them to the evidence or facts in hand, to the end that their action may be intelligent and their conclusions correct." Chicago, M. &

of the witnesses; the latter being proper but the former improper.³⁵ General knowledge to be properly used must be the knowledge which men in general have and not knowledge common to a few or to a particular class,³⁶ or knowledge common only to the jury.³⁷ Moreover, the inferences which jurors are entitled to draw from their general experience and knowledge must be based on and drawn from facts already in evidence.³⁸

(II.) Judicial Notice by Jurors.—While, perhaps, strictly speaking, jurors cannot take "judicial notice" of facts,³⁹ they, by analogy at least, may exercise similar powers, and the rule, as commonly stated, is that jurors may consider any facts of which judicial notice may be taken.⁴⁰

[a] Statement of the Principle.—"It may be said that there are certain matters, of which, by reason of common knowledge, observation and experience, the courts take judicial notice. These 'courts may and should notice without proof, and assume as known by others, whatever, as the phrase is, everybody knows.' Thayer on Ev. 301. Greenleaf says: 'In general, the jury may, in modern times, act only upon evidence properly laid before them in the course of the trial. But so far as the matter in question is one upon which men in general have a common fund of knowledge and experience, the analogy of judicial notice obtains to some extent, and the jury are allowed to resort to this possession in making up their minds. . . . But the scope of this doctrine is narrow and is strictly limited to a few matters of elemental experience in human nature, commercial affairs and everyday life.' 1 Evidence (16th ed.), 17. Professor Thayer discussing the subject, says: 'But as the jury is bound to keep within the restrictions imposed upon courts by the principle of judicial notice, so also it has the liberty which that principle allows to courts. The circumstance that the jury is a subordinate tribunal does not change the nature of their office.' Ev., 296; Wigmore Ev., sec. 2565." Jenkins v. Southern Ry. Co., 146 N. C. 178, 59 S. E. 663.

(C.) MATTERS THE SUBJECT OF EXPERT TESTIMONY.—In considering matters which have been the subject of expert testimony jurors are not bound to find in accordance with such testimony but are to consider it in the light of their common knowledge and general understanding.⁵² In estimating the reasonable value of professional services the jury may consider their own knowledge and experience.⁵³ They are not bound to take the opinion of real estate experts in determining the value of land to be condemned,⁵⁴ but if the evidence in the case is entirely uncontradicted they cannot ignore it and form an independent conclusion as to their value.⁵⁵

(D.) CREDIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.—In weighing the evidence and determining its credibility, jurors may use the general knowledge which they have gained from observation and experience.⁵⁶ According to

[a] Reason for the Rule.—"Usually our juries are cosmopolitan in character, being made up of the farmer, the mechanic, the business man, and the ordinary laborer. It is largely because juries are selected from all the walks of life that they ordinarily make such desirable triers of fact. Some jurors on almost every panel are at least apt to have some knowledge that is not common to all the jurors, and which may be a valuable aid in separating false or mistaken testimony from that which is true. . . . Must they divest themselves of this knowledge, because it is not common to all the jurors? We do not think so. Looking at the question from the practical point of view, they cannot do so, and there is little use in building up a theoretical rule of law that will not, and in fact cannot, work when it is put to practical application." Imparting such knowledge to fellow jurors, see supra, IX, J, 5, b, (II).

[a] "The credibility of testimony is a question exclusively for the jury and we do not see how it is possible for a juror in considering that question to exclude from his mind his own knowledge of the character of the witnesses. The question is, what impression does the testimony make upon the minds of the jurors, and that impression must necessarily be affected by their own knowledge of the character of the witnesses from whom such testimony proceeds. We suppose that it rarely, if ever, happens that the character of at least some of the witnesses is not known to some or all of the jurors, and we do not see how any rule of law can prevent such knowledge from having its weight. If a fact is testified to by a witness whom the jurors know to be of such an infamous such knowledge is not common to all the jurors. There are, however, authorities to the contrary.⁶¹

K. SENDING PAPERS AND ARTICLES TO THE JURY ROOM.—1. In General.⁶²—The practice in trials at common law was to refuse to allow the jury to take with it upon retirement, papers which had been introduced in evidence,⁶³ at least if they were not under seal.⁶⁴ Under the modern practice, in the absence of statute, the propriety of such action rests largely in the discretion of the trial court.⁶⁵

2. Time and Manner of Delivery to Jury.—The better practice is to deliver all papers to the jury at the close of the trial and in the presence of the parties and their counsel.⁶⁶ If not taken out by the jury when they retire, such documents may properly be sent⁶⁷ to them

character as to render him totally unworthy of belief, it is difficult to understand how any rule of law can compel a jury to believe that which they cannot believe. The constitution of the human mind renders such a rule as that contended for utterly impracticable." State v. Jacob, 30 S. C. 131, 8 S. E. 698, 14 Am. St. Rep. 897.

[a] "The common-law rule was that jurors were allowed to take with them in their deliberations only such instruments as were under seal, and that they were not permitted to take with them any unsealed papers excepting by consent of the parties. The reason for this, according to Lord Hale and Lord Gilbert was, that jurors were supposed to be, and for the most part were, unlettered men. They could not read. A writing conveyed to them nothing. But in the case of sealed instruments, as these jurors were drawn from the vicinage, they were quite apt to be familiar with the armorial bearings of their neighborhood great from which the seals were derived. An instrument under seal, therefore, spoke for itself, and the jurors were permitted to take such instruments with them, not for the purpose of reading the instrument itself, but rather for the purpose of verifying their recollection of the seal and testing its genuineness. . . . But in the case of other exhibits not involving a knowledge of reading or writing, it seems to have been a matter of discretion with the court to allow the jury to take them into the jury room in aid of their deliberations." *Higgins v. [a] Obscene Letters.—In Winters v. United States, 201 Fed. 845, 120 C. C. A. 175, the letters in question were of an obscene character. It is said: "The letters were introduced in evidence on the trial, seen and inspected by the defendant, and we think the mere matter of the letters being taken by the jury to be read in their room while deliberating upon the case, rather than being read to the jury or by the jury on the trial of the case, was a matter which defendant could waive. It would be better practice, however, to have the letters either read to the jury, or given to the jury and each one of the jurors required to read them while the case was on trial rather than to have them take them to the jury room, to be there first read."

well be allowed in the jury room.⁸² An answer which consists of inconsistent denials should be kept from the jury.⁸³ If the instructions are so framed as to be meaningless without a consideration of the complaint, it is proper to send it out.⁸⁴ As a general rule, when any of the pleadings are permitted to go to the jury, they should all go, but where there is no proof to support some of the counts, such counts should not be sent out, at least without some explanation or instruction.⁸⁵ Pleadings which have been superseded should not be sent out,⁸⁶ and where separate counts or defenses have been stricken out by the court, or demurrers thereto sustained, the pleadings should never be sent out until such counts or defenses have been detached or removed;⁸⁷ it is not enough that they are cancelled and marked "stricken out."⁸⁸ Error in this particular is not, however, ordinarily prejudicial.⁸⁹ The fact that exhibits are attached to the pleadings does not render it error for the court to submit the pleadings to the jury,⁹⁰ at least where they are properly cautioned as to the use they are to make of them;⁹¹ and if the exhibit is a document which has also been introduced in evidence, there is an added reason why it should be submitted.⁹² A former verdict in a civil case attached to the pleadings should be detached or concealed in some way before they are sent out,⁹³ but failure to do so may not constitute prejudicial error,⁹⁴ if it is not considered by the jurors,⁹⁵ or if they are properly cautioned in regard to its use,⁹⁶ unless it appears that it was fraudulently and designedly delivered to them to influence their verdict.⁹⁷ In criminal cases, the fact that a verdict in a former trial,⁹⁸ or a verdict of guilty found against a codefendant tried under the same indictment,⁹⁹ is attached to the indictment which is sent to the jury, is not ground for a new trial, at least where no objection is made at the time;¹ though it is better practice to conceal the verdict.²

The fact that a pleading contains admissions by a party does not require the court to send it to the jury.³ The jury should not be instructed that it is their duty to read the pleadings.⁴ Where a statute authorizes papers read in evidence to be taken out by the jury and is silent as to pleadings, this does not preclude the court from sending them out, in its discretion,⁵ though it may also properly refuse to do so.⁶

Bills of particulars have sometimes been kept from the jury,⁷ although they are more often sent out with the pleadings.⁸ Various other papers, properly a part of the files of the case may under differing circumstances be sent to the jury,⁹ or kept from them.¹⁰

b. Manner of Use by Jury.—Pleadings may be used by the jury for the purpose of refreshing their memory as to any fact to which they are pertinent,¹¹ but not as evidence in the case, beyond the admissions which may be contained in them.¹² The use to which the jury may put them should be regulated by instructions.¹³

4. Instructions.—There is much diversity in the practice in regard to allowing the jury to take with them the instructions given by the court. In the absence of a controlling statute, it is discretionary with the court to send out with the jury written instructions given in the case.¹⁴ In some jurisdictions it is held to be improper to send them to the jury.¹⁵ Statutes, in still other jurisdictions, expressly provide that instructions shall be given to the jury on their retirement.¹⁶ Under such statutes it is only such instructions as are requested to be given in writing before argument commences, which come within the terms of the statute.¹⁷ If the statute merely states that instructions "may" be sent out, the provision is construed as permissive and not mandatory.¹⁸ Instructions refused by the court should not be sent to the jury,¹⁹ but if such instructions were those submitted as to amounts, etc., which the jury could not remember and for which they would want to make reference to the charge. We find this to be so, and as no objection was made by counsel to sending the charge out, we think it is no cause for a new trial. Indeed some of us regard it as a wholesome practice for every case." Chattahoochee Brick Co. v. Sullivan, 86 Ga. 50, 12 S. E. 216.

[a] Conditions Under Which the Practice Is Approved.—"The reason given by the trial judge for allowing the charge to go out in this instance, was that it had in it many statements

[b] Review.—The exercise of the discretion of the trial court is not reviewable "upon writ of error except for such obvious abuse of discretion as might exist in permitting a jury to take instructions framed upon one assumption of facts proved, and refusing to permit them to take those framed on the converse assumption." *Garst v. In a few jurisdictions it is said to be the better practice not to send the evidence out with the jury,⁶⁰ and even error to do so without the consent of both parties,⁶¹ the practice being to bring the jury into court if they desire to examine papers, where their action can be taken in the presence of the trial judge, the parties, and counsel.⁶² A few authorities hold it to be error to refuse to send out documentary evidence.⁶³ Ordinarily where some of the written evidence is sent to the

Such a course is dictated by the principle which entitles the parties to have their controversy decided according to the testimony; for an actual reference to such papers by the jury keeps the testimony before their minds more clearly than jury, it should all go,⁶⁴ but this has also been held to be a matter within the discretion of the court.⁶⁵

b. Statutory Provisions Generally.—In some states, statutes have been enacted governing the practice of taking papers to the jury room.⁶⁶ A statute which provides that enumerated papers “may” be taken to the jury room, is permissive only, and the court in the first instance need not send out such papers,⁶⁷ but when requested by either party,⁶⁸ or the jury,⁶⁹ the papers must be sent out and a failure to do so constitutes error.⁷⁰

or it may, if it sees fit send them to the jury.⁸² In many cases where the rights of the parties can only be ascertained as a result of mathematical computation the practice is highly commended,⁸³ and by some courts it is held to be prejudicial error to refuse to allow such papers to go to the jury.⁸⁴

The jury should in such cases be cautioned that the statement is not to be considered by them as evidence in the case.⁸⁵ It is error, however, to send out such a paper where there is no evidence to support some of the items contained therein.⁸⁶

[a] "With reasonable caution on the part of the court, no unfairness can be practised in sending out a paper such as this; of its consequences no test is so good as experience, and that proves not only its fairness, but its great utility. Indeed, where accounts are submitted to a jury, it would be impossible to get along without it. It originated with mutual convenience and the agreement of parties, but it has prevailed so long and so uninterruptedly, as to have grown to be a rule of practice, and as such we are not bound to disturb it." Memoranda of the statements of witnesses, as to accounts containing numerous items, may be given to the jury.⁸⁷ A calculation of interest due may be given to them,⁸⁸ but a calculation of the damages sustained should not be delivered to the jury where no complicated mathematical computation was necessary to determine the amount due,⁸⁹ even where a statute provides that the jury may take with them "written evidence" introduced at the trial.⁹⁰

i. Statutes and Law Treatises.—Neither statutes,⁹¹ nor law treatises should be sent out with the jury.⁹² And the court may refuse to allow books of foreign law put in evidence, to go to the jury room.⁹³ It has been held, however, in some cases that a jury is entitled to

It is not the duty of the court, however to say that the evidence is not sufficient to support any item, but only to see that there is evidence which if believed by the jury will sustain the item. Such instructions might have healed the error, if the contents of the book had been unimportant. But the objectionable portions in this case were such as were likely to attract the eye of the jury, and accident or curiosity would be likely to lead them, despite the admonition of the court, to read the plaintiff's comments upon the defendants and her private meditations, which had no proper place in their deliberations." 1. Documents Not Admitted in Evidence.—Documents which have not been placed in evidence, should of course not be sent to the jury.⁴ Even where the due execution of instruments is admitted by the pleadings, they should not be taken to the jury room unless they have been introduced in evidence.⁵ But papers which have been treated by the parties as in evidence, though they were not in fact offered,⁶ or to the sending out of which both parties have consented,⁷ may properly go to the jury room.

In general, prejudicial error does not follow from the mere fact that documents not introduced in evidence were taken out by the jury,⁸ unless the document contained material and damaging evidence,⁹ and it appears that it was read and considered by the jury.¹⁰

and considered by the jury the verdict will be set aside,¹⁷ even though no intention to improperly influence the jury is shown.¹⁸

There must be some direct, positive evidence that papers inadvertently left in the jury room were perused by the jurors or came to their attention and knowledge,¹⁹ and it has been held that it must be made to appear that the jury were improperly influenced by the objectionable document,²⁰ since it is the duty of counsel to examine the papers sent to the jury and see that none are sent out which should not properly go to them.²¹

6. Depositions.—The practice of allowing depositions to be taken to the jury room is also largely committed to the discretion of the trial court.²² In some states, depositions are not allowed to be taken out by the jury,²³ except by consent of both parties,²⁴ it being considered that this would afford one party an undue advantage;²⁵ a further reason being that they frequently contain much irrelevant matter.²⁶ In a few jurisdictions the practice is favored and it is held error to refuse to send a deposition out.²⁷ In many states statutes prohibit the court from allowing the jury to take depositions with them.²⁸ A statute which authorizes "papers read in evidence" to be carried out by the jury, does not include depositions.²⁹

Exhibits attached to a deposition may be sent out with the deposition, when that is allowed to go to the jury,³⁰ and papers which, though originally attached to depositions, have been detached and admitted in evidence, independently of the deposition, are not covered by statutes prohibiting the taking of depositions to the jury room,³¹

[a] Basis of the Rule.—Notes were identified and authenticated by a deposition. In holding that they could be detached and sent to the jury the court said: "If the witness had been produced and had identified the notes, and proved their execution and given their history, and they were thereupon admitted in evidence, it could but unless so admitted in evidence they cannot be detached and sent out.³²

A deposition containing a large amount of incompetent matter should not be given to the jury, without first removing the incompetent portion,³³ or at least instructing the jury to disregard this portion;³⁴ but error by the court in this particular is usually not prejudicial in character,³⁵ particularly where it occurs as the result of a mistake and the matter is not material.³⁶

7. Demonstrative Evidence.—Articles constituting demonstrative or real evidence may be sent to the jury room whenever that practice seems desirable to the court,³⁷ especially where the jury requests that not be contended that they were part of the testimony of the witness. They could in such case be taken by the jury upon retiring. And similarly, we think that they are not parts of the deposition although it proved certain matters concerning them." Cockrill v. Hall, 76 Cal. 102, 18 Pac. 318.

[a] Use To Be Made of the Evidence.—"The court may permit the jury to take with them and use in their deliberations any exhibit where the circumstances call for it, observing the proper precaution of instructing the jury in the nature of the use which they shall make of the exhibit.

the articles be submitted to their inspection,³⁸ or with the consent of both parties.³⁹ This does not amount to receiving evidence out of court.⁴⁰

In criminal cases, the statute sometimes provides that exhibits shall be sent to the jury only with the consent of both the state and the accused.⁴¹ If a statute enumerates certain papers which may be taken out by the jury, this does not prevent the court, in its discretion from sending out exhibits, not writings.⁴²

2. Reading Testimony to Jury.—The court may, in its discretion of its own motion,⁵⁶ or, on the request of the jury, which reports an inability to agree on what testimony was given by a witness, require the court reporter to read to the jury from his notes testimony theretofore given in the case.⁵⁷ This practice is sometimes authorized by statute.⁵⁸ In some jurisdictions, however, it is held to be erro-asked the witness before it is propounded, though failure to inform counsel does not constitute prejudicial error. Jack v. State (Tex. Crim.), 117 S. W. 139.

[a] Basis of This Rule.—“The introduction of the official stenographer to take down the evidence in every case is of very recent date and so far as concerns his official duties we must look to the statute creating the office to learn what they are. . . . He is not made the umpire to decide disputed questions as to what the evidence was. . . . The juror has a right and it is his duty to base his verdict on the evidence as he heard it, and he is not required and should not be compelled to yield his own memory and his own understanding of the evidence to that of another, even though that other professed to have taken notes. A juror’s memory of the evidence at that stage of the case is as trustworthy as the stenographer’s notes.” Padgitt v. Moll, 159 Mo. 143, 60 S. W. 121, 81 Am. St. Rep. 347, 52 L. R. A. 854.

[a] Matters Within the Court’s Discretion.—“The entire matter of causing the stenographer’s notes to be so read and of submitting copies of the whole or portions of them to the jury, must rest, to a great extent, in the discretion of the trial judge. Whether there is reasonable ground for the jury’s request for the evidence, whether the transcript made contains matter which ought not to be submitted to the jury, or is of doubtful accuracy, whether certain parts of

on the particular point involved.⁹⁵ The court may have the testimony of other witnesses read, although no request for this was made by the jury,⁹⁶ and also more testimony of the same witness than was asked for by the jury.⁹⁷ Where circumstances call for it the court may properly postpone reading of the testimony until a later time.⁹⁸ It has also been held to be proper, when desirable, to submit a type-written transcript of the notes of the testimony to the jury for use in their deliberations.⁹⁹

3. Restatement of Testimony by Court.—On the request of the jury and counsel, the court should bring in the jury and state to them his remembrance of the testimony of any particular witness.¹ In restating the testimony the court may refer to minutes of the testimony taken by himself,² or by a person not an officer of the court,³ and the fact that he misstates an immaterial fact does not constitute prejudicial error.⁴ The court should not, however, allow the jury to take out the notes he has made during the trial.⁵ The

the testimony can be read or copies of it submitted without too great inconvenience or loss of time in the trial of the case, and in such a manner as will, with fairness to all parties, furnish the desired information to the jury, are questions for the determination of the trial judge." *State v. amount of the testimony which shall be restated is left to the court's discretion.⁶

4. Presence of Counsel and Parties.—Testimony should ordinarily be read to the jury in open court and in the presence of the judge and of the parties and their counsel;⁷ but in civil cases the absence of counsel is not ground for a new trial.⁸ In criminal cases, however, a reading of testimony or restatement of the evidence by the court is a part of the trial and it is error to act without the defendant being present.⁹ The court stenographer should not be sent to the jury room to read any or all testimony requested by the jury,¹⁰ unless by consent of both parties;¹¹ and information as to the testimony of a witness cannot be given by the judge by a written answer to a written inquiry from the jury.¹² Nor should the judge visit the jury room for the purpose of stating the testimony to the jury.¹³ Where a witness is re-examined, this must be done in open court or at least in the presence of both court and counsel.¹⁴

5. Objections and Exceptions.—An objection to an order of the court requiring a witness to be recalled or testimony read to the jury must be interposed,¹⁵ as soon as the order of the court is known,¹⁶ or it will be waived. So too, counsel must object if he desires to raise the point that the court did not read a sufficient portion of the testi-

M. METHOD OF REACHING AGREEMENT.—1. In General.—Nothing but a free and deliberate finding made upon a conscientious conviction of the judgment of all the jurors will satisfy the law and render a verdict valid.¹⁹ While jurors should never surrender their convictions in order to reach an agreement with their fellow jurors, yet it is their duty to harmonize their views, where possible, and to make such reasonable concessions as will enable all to conscientiously agree upon a verdict.²⁰

2. By Chance.—a. In General.—Verdicts arrived at by a resort to chance or lot and not as a result of the deliberative action of the entire jury are illegal,²¹ though the improper action of the juror in resorting to chance may be cured by a subsequent reconsideration and determination of the case on its merits before rendering the verdict;²²

and it has been held that where the amount of the verdict is determined by lot the error may be cured by the court's compelling a remission of a part of the damages to make the verdict no greater than the smallest amount favored by any juror.²³

b. Average Verdicts.—(I.) In General.—After the fact of a party's right to a recovery in some amount has been determined by the jury, but the jurors are unable to agree upon the amount of that recovery, they may properly resort to the expedient of obtaining the average amount favored by all, from the various amounts which in the opinion of the several jurors should be awarded to the successful party; and if they thereafter adopt the average thus obtained as the proper amount of their verdict, after due consideration and deliberation and without having entered into a prior agreement to be bound by the average, the verdict will be upheld.²⁴ Where the amount

[a] Where a difference of opinion exists as to the amount the plaintiff is entitled to recover, "if each juror marks down the sum which he thinks is correct and right, the result would fairly express the average judgment of the jury, and this mode of harmonizing upon the verdict would be just as pure and innocent as if effected 'by word of mouth.'" *Lee v. of a verdict. If every jurymen is to adhere pertinaciously to his own judgment regardless of the opinions of his fellows, especially upon the question of measure of damage or degree of guilt or quantum of punishment; if jurors are denied the privilege of harmonizing, discarding and reconciling extreme opinions by concession and compromise, and meeting on middle ground, a failure of justice, or what is tantamount, indefinite delay, is the inevitable consequence." *Thompson v. for an odd or fractional amount enough in itself to authorize the conclusion that it was the result of a prior agreement or was not arrived at in a legitimate way.⁴⁰

3. By Compromise.—Verdicts are often and properly the result of mutual concessions on the part of the jurors, especially as to their amount, in actions for unliquidated damages,⁴¹ and this of itself is no reason for refusing to accept them.⁴² In criminal cases the term of imprisonment or amount of the fine,⁴² or even the degree of the crime,⁴³ may be arrived at by mutual concessions on the part of the jurors.

But a verdict arrived at by compromise on the part of a juror involving a surrender of conscientious convictions as to the right of the successful litigant to recover anything will not be allowed to stand.⁴⁴ The line separating a valid verdict reached by a harmonizing of previously diverse views, from an invalid compromise verdict, is often

[a] Basis for Setting Aside a Compromise Verdict.—"The wrong, however, in such a verdict, rests in the fact that it does not express the real judgment of the jurors, and not alone that it is too large or too small. A defendant cannot object that a verdict is too small if it is actually the expression of the judgment of the shadowy and ill defined.⁴⁵ A compromise by the jurors for the mere purpose of reaching an agreement, vitiates a verdict.⁴⁶ Frequently the character of the verdict itself is such as to reasonably indicate that it could only have been the result of an improper compromise,⁴⁷ as where it is manifestly inadequate;⁴⁸ and the conduct of the jury jurors. Nor will a court set aside a verdict as being the result of a compromise, unless it clearly appears that it actually was such a result." Stretch v. Stretch (Mich.), 158 N. W. 185.

45. Simmons v. Fish, 210 Mass. 563, 97 N. E. 102, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 588.

[a] "A verdict which is the result of real harmony of thought growing out of open-minded discussion between jurors with a willingness to be convinced, with a proper regard for opinions of others and with a reasonable distrust of individual views not shared by their fellows and a fair yielding of one reason to a stronger one, each having in mind the great desirability of unanimity both for the parties and for the public, is not open to criticism. But a verdict which is reached only by the surrender of conscientious convictions upon one material issue by some jurors in return for a relinquishment by others of their like settled opinion upon another issue and the result is one which does not command the approval of the whole panel, is a compromise verdict founded upon conduct subversive of the soundness of trial by jury." Simmons v. Fish, 210 Mass. 563, 97 N. E. 102, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 588.

[a] The Principle Stated.—"It is no doubt true that juries often compromise in the way here suggested and that by 'splitting differences' they sometimes return verdicts with which the judgment of no one of them is satisfied. But this is an abuse. The law contemplates that they shall, by their discussions, harmonize their views if possible, but not that they shall compromise, divide and yield for the mere purpose of an agreement. The sentiment or notion which permits this tends to bring jury trial into discredit and to convert it into a lottery." Goodsell v. Seeley, 46 Mich. 623, 10 N. W. 44, 41 Am. Rep. 183.

[b] Agreement to find a verdict against the convictions of the dissenting jurors with the understanding that it shall not exceed, in amount, a specified sum, is improper. Wiegand v. Fee Bros. Co., 73 App. Div. 139, 76 N. Y. Supp. 872, 11 N. Y. Ann. Cas. 117.

[c] In a criminal case a juror should not surrender his conscientious convictions as to the degree of the crime established by the evidence in order that an agreement may be reached. People v. Koerner, 117 App. Div. 40, 102 N. Y. Supp. 93.

47. Simmons v. Fish, 210 Mass. 563, 97 N. E. 102, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 588.

[a] That a verdict was for just one-half the sum demanded in the complaint "may be cause for surmise" that it was the result of a compromise but "is no evidence of it." Hamilton v. Owego Water Works, 22 App. Div. 573, 48 N. Y. Supp. 106, affirmed, 163 N. Y. 562, 57 N. E. 1111. Compare Metcalf v. Bockoven, 62 Neb. 877, 87 N. W. 1055.

[a] An inadequate verdict in an action for personal injuries in which contributory negligence was pleaded is indicative of a compromise. Miller v. Barker, Rose & Clinton Co., 158 N. Y. Supp. 865.

[b] Verdict for $200 for loss of an eye by a young boy was held to be an almost conclusive demonstration that it was the result, not of justifiable concession of views, but of improper compromise of the vital principles which should have controlled the decision. *Simmons v. will also sometimes point conclusively to the same end.⁴⁹ Where the issues are so framed that if the plaintiff is entitled to recover anything, he is entitled to recover a specified, ascertained amount as liquidated damages, a verdict for less than this amount will be set aside as based upon an evident compromise,⁵⁰ but where the inference of a compromise is not a necessary one the verdict will be allowed to stand.⁵¹ Where the testimony as to a fact which is not capable of

Whatever statements are made by the court to the jury it is well to add that no effort is being made to coerce any juror into surrendering his honest, deliberate judgment,⁶⁵ and that jurors should, under no circumstances, surrender their personal convictions in order to reach an agreement.⁶⁶ Admonitions to the jury of the character here under discussion are not, strictly speaking, to be considered as instructions.⁶⁷

2. Limitations on Discretion of Court.—While a broad discretion is confided to the court, this discretion must not be abused. Statements to the jury calculated to coerce them into reaching an agreement, unsupported by their honest convictions will constitute prejudicial error,⁶⁸ even though such statements are directed toward a single juror.⁶⁹

3. Inquiries by Court.—The court may, in its discretion recall the jury at any time for the purpose of making inquiries pertinent to the case on which they are deliberating.⁷⁰ No criticism of the jury

nor implication of urgency is involved in inquiries by the court of the jury as to whether he can be of aid to them by giving further instructions,⁷¹ or as to the likelihood of their reaching an agreement within a short time.⁷² It has been held that the court may properly inquire as to the reason for their non-agreement,⁷³ and as to whether it is a question of law or of fact on which they disagree;⁷⁴ but it is improper for it to ask in what proportion the jury is divided.⁷⁵ The foreman of the jury should not indicate what jurors were refusing to agree to a verdict.⁷⁶

4. Matters to Which the Court May Refer.—a. Duty of Jurors To Harmonize Their Views.—The jurors' attention may properly be called to their duty to harmonize their views, if possible.⁷⁷ and in this connection they may be told that a difference of opinion between a small minority and the majority should induce the former to doubt the correctness of their own judgments and lead them to a careful re-examination of the facts in the case for the purpose of revising their preconceived opinions;⁷⁸ at the same time they should also be informed that their verdict should be the result of their own convictions and not a mere acquiescence in the conclusions of their fellow jurors.⁷⁹ The line is very close between such statements and statements which are improper as tending to indicate that a compromise of the views of individual jurors might be valid,⁸⁰ as that more weight should be given to the opinion of the majority than to the views of a minority of the jurors,⁸¹ or that a minority should yield or surrender its views to those of the majority.⁸²

[a] Improper Remarks.—(1) To say that for a juror to "entertain an opinion and stick by that opinion regardless of what any one else in the jury may say" is to commit "willful contempt of court," and subjects the juror to punishment, is prejudicial error. Levinson v. Zipkin, 119 N. Y. Supp. 680. And see Lively v. Sexton, 35 Ill. App. 417. (2) Where the court remarked that at times men mistake stubbornness for firmness "thereby intimating that one or more of the jurors who were holding out against the majority were stubborn rather than firm," it was held to be prejudicial error. Brooks v. Barth, 98 Mo. App. 89, 71 S. W. 1098. And see McPeak v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 128 Mo. 617, 30 S. W. 170. d. Necessity of Decision by Some Jury.—That the case will, of necessity, have to be decided by some jury, at some time, is a proper suggestion by the court.²

e. Ability of the Jury.—The jury may be told that they are just as competent and just as likely to decide the case correctly as any other jury could be;³ that no other jury will ever be in a better position, to decide the case;⁴ that any future jury would be selected in the same manner and from the same source;⁵ and that the record of the jurors in reaching agreements in other cases may be commended.⁶

c. Statements by the Court.—The mere statement by the court, where the jury has failed to agree, that the court is not going to discharge them, does not amount to coercion on his part.²³ The court may properly intimate that if no agreement is reached the jury will be kept together over night,²⁴ or that if a verdict is not returned by a stated time the jury will be excused and later reconvened,²⁵ or that in such event the jury will have no opportunity to report until a later hour;²⁶ but the postponement of the hour at which a report will be received from the jury in such cases must not be unreasonable in

"The thought is suggested that the conclusion reached may possibly have resulted from weariness, exhaustion, and the overcoming of opposition and differences of opinion by force of numbers and sheer physical and mental inability of a few to withstand the arguments and importunities of a majority of the jurors for such a long period of time. If such were true, then the action taken results in a species of coercion rather than free action and voluntary agreement on a verdict by each individual juror. . . . On the contrary, if the jury were provided with suitable quarters, were able to sleep when nature required it, and were laboring under such surroundings and circumstances as permitted them to proceed leisurely and comfortably in their deliberations . . . the verdict could not be successfully attacked as being the result of coercion." Jahne v. State, 68 Neb. 154, 179, 94 N. W. 158, 104 N. W. 154, upholding verdict reached after more than six days' deliberation

[b] In upholding a verdict reached after eighty-nine hours' deliberation the court said: "It seems that the men who composed the jury were possessed of a large measure of pluck and endurance and that those who had been voting for acquittal stood resolutely by their opinions until convinced that point of time.²⁷ A statement that the jury will be discharged at a stated hour unless there is then strong probability of an agreement being reached is proper,²⁸ but any statement, amounting to a threat, that the jury will be kept together until they reach an agreement,²⁹ or for a stated and an unreasonable period of time, will constitute coercion;³⁰ though in some jurisdictions it is considered proper to inform the jury that they can be held together until the end of the term.³¹

[a] Example.—"In view of the issues involved and quantity of evidence introduced each juror must have reached a conclusion soon after retiring. An all night session failed to produce an agreement as to the facts. No misunderstanding existed as to the law of the case. Then came the statement of the learned circuit judge that the jury would not be permitted to separate without an agreement. The statement was deliberate, repeated after objection by the accused. It cannot be assumed that the judge did not intend to execute his threat or that the jury would question his sincerity. . . . It would be absurd to say that such a situation would probably have no effect upon the action of an average juror." State v. Place, 20 S. D. 489, 107 N. W. 829.

[b] Bailiff's statement that the judge had gone away for several days and that he would keep the jury together until the return of the judge, unless they agreed, amounted to coercion. Alabama Fuel & Iron Co. v. Rice, 187 Ala. 458, 65 So. 402. And see supra, IX, E.

Where a sealed verdict is permissible,³² a direction to the jury, if they do not agree before court adjourns, to hand their verdict to the officer in charge of them when they do agree and that they may then separate but must return to court at a stated time is proper.³³

6. Imposing Hardships on Jury.—a. In General.—At common law it was the aim of the courts to obtain a verdict from the jury in all cases and to effectuate this result various coercive measures were adopted.³⁴ Modern conditions have greatly modified this practice.³⁵

b. Food and Drink.—An agreement of the jury cannot be forced by refusal to furnish them necessary food and drink.³⁶

c. Lodgings.—While the jury is considering the case, comfortable lodgings should be provided for it in case of a prolonged confinement,³⁷

[a] "Formerly the practice was to constrain juries to agree; and for the purpose of accelerating unanimity, they might be kept without meat, drink, fire, or candle till they were unanimously agreed; and if they held out and could not agree, though they were not to be threatened or imprisoned, the judges might carry them round the circuit from town to town in a cart (3 Bl. 375). otherwise a shorter period of confinement may amount to coercion.³⁸

7. Prejudice From Improper Remarks or Conduct.—a. In General.—The bare possibility that the jury may have been misled by statements of the court is insufficient to show that a party has been prejudiced by such remarks.³⁹ That the verdict is returned shortly after the court has given the instructions of which complaint is made, indicates that the verdict is the result of coercion on the part of the court;⁴⁰ more especially is this true when the verdict is in the nature of a compromise.⁴¹ On the other hand, the fact that the verdict was not returned for a considerable time thereafter shows that the remarks of the court were not the controlling feature of the action of the jury.⁴² A subsequent request for instructions on the same,⁴³ or other points, indicates that the jury was not improperly affected by the remarks of the court.⁴⁴

b. Character of the Verdict.—Where the liability of the defendant is conceded or was properly found by the jury and the sole question is as to the prejudicial effect of the instructions of the court as affecting the measure of recovery, no prejudice will be found to have been suffered if it can be reasonably inferred that a jury of average judgment, after considering the evidence, would not have awarded a less sum,⁴⁵ or where the evidence is of such a character that the court could properly have directed the jury to have returned the verdict which was rendered,⁴⁶ or even where the verdict is supported by the clear weight of the evidence.⁴⁷

X. DISCHARGE OF JURORS AND JURY.—A. AUTHORITY OF COURT TO DISCHARGE ENTIRE JURY.—Formerly, a jury impaneled and sworn in a case affecting life or member could not be discharged until they had rendered a verdict;⁴⁸ and the jury could be conveyed from one circuit to another until they agreed on a verdict.⁴⁹ But this rule has been questioned and relaxed,⁵⁰ so that under the modern practice the court may discharge the jury before the rendition of the verdict⁵¹ when the ends of justice will be furthered thereby, or when a necessity therefor arises, and this is true even in capital cases.⁵² The court no longer has the right to have the jury conveyed from one circuit to another until it agrees on a verdict.⁵³

The power to discharge a jury ought to be exercised with the greatest caution, under urgent circumstances, and for very plain and obvious reasons, however.⁵⁴ In capital cases, especially, the courts should be extremely careful how they interfere with any of the chances of life in favor of the prisoner.⁵⁵

B. AUTHORITY TO DISCHARGE AND SUBSTITUTE INDIVIDUAL JURORS.

At common law and in the absence of statute covering the particular case, the court cannot withdraw an individual juror, during trial, but must discharge the whole jury,⁵⁶ unless the accused consents to have the others remain.⁵⁷ If either party desires, the balance may be recalled and examined as originally upon their voir dire and the parties may have their challenges over.⁵⁸ It has been held, however, that the court may discharge a juror, where the defendant does not demand a temporary postponement pending the juror's illness.⁵⁹

Statutes have been enacted which have abrogated the common law in whole or in part, and allow the court to swear a new juror instead of the disabled or incompetent juror,⁶⁰ or in its discretion to dis-

[a] Unauthorized Person on Jury. Where after a jury is sworn but before any evidence has been taken, it transpires that another has without authority taken the place of a juror examined and selected without challenge or examination, the court should discharge the former and substitute the latter and have the jury resworn. State v. Sternberg, 59 Mo. 410.

[b] In Texas (1) in capital cases each juror is sworn when selected. After he is sworn the court cannot discharge him unless the defendant consents. But in felony cases less than capital, the juror is not sworn until the whole jury has been selected. The court may in a proper case discharge him before the entire jury is sworn. Ripley v. State, 29 Tex. App. 37, 14 S. W. 448; Sterling v. State, 15 Tex. App. 249. See Evans v. State, 6 Tex. App. 513, holding that where a juror is found incompetent to serve, he may in the discretion of the court be dis-

duction of evidence, even in a capital case,⁶⁶ for cause existing before as well as after the swearing.⁶⁷

In all cases of substitution, the incapacitated juror must be discharged by the court before the substitution is made.⁶⁸ The remainder of the jurors are not again subject to challenge,⁶⁹ and need not be re-sworn.⁷⁰

C. WHO MAY DISCHARGE. — The power to discharge a juror or jury rests with the court alone,⁷¹ and cannot be delegated to the clerk or any other officer of the court,⁷² although according to some authorities, the officer may act under instructions of the court in discharging a jury.⁷³

[a] Where Juror With Opinion Associates With Others.—Where it is discovered that a juror has formed an opinion after having been accepted and having associated with the other jurors, it is not necessary to discharge the whole jury but they should be re-examined to ascertain if they are still competent after association with the disqualified juror. *Ellis v. If the officer neglects to discharge the jury in obedience to the court's instructions, however, and the jury renders a verdict, the verdict is valid.⁷⁴

D. WHEN DISCHARGE MAY BE MADE.—A jury cannot be discharged on Sunday or a legal holiday for any other reason,⁷⁵ than that they have arrived at a verdict on such a day,⁷⁶ although some decisions deny the right to discharge on such a day for this reason.⁷⁷

is determined there is no necessity for its verdict.⁸⁶

It is impossible to define all the circumstances which render it necessary to interfere,⁸⁷ but certain grounds have been recognized as constituting a sufficient necessity warranting a discharge of the jury,⁸⁸ and some statutes have been enacted authorizing a discharge where it would not be permissible at common law.⁸⁹ The statutes requiring a discharge under certain circumstances do not interfere with the power of the court to discharge the jury under other circumstances of evident necessity.⁹⁰

If two or more grounds for a discharge exist, the jury may be discharged if either is sufficient without reference to the other;⁹¹ but if neither is sufficient in itself, it cannot be supplemented by the other so as to authorize a discharge.⁹²

2. Defective Indictment.—A jury may be properly discharged where it is found that the indictment is so defective that a conviction thereunder cannot be had.⁹³

discharge of the jury without the consent of the accused.⁹⁴

4. Irregularities in Drawing Jurors and Jury.—The court may discharge the jury where it is illegally drawn,⁹⁵ where a juror fraudulently procures himself to be selected,⁹⁶ or where a juror is returned through outside influence and under suspicious circumstances.⁹⁷ If, through mistake, thirteen jurors are sworn, the judge may discharge the one last drawn and proceed with the trial.⁹⁸

5. Disqualification of Jurors.—Bias or prejudice of a juror, discovered either before or after the jury is sworn is a ground of discharge.⁹⁹ And if after the jury is sworn, it is discovered that one of the jurors is an alien,¹ has conscientious scruples against finding a verdict involving life and death,² or was a member of the grand jury indicting the accused,³ he may be discharged and another substituted.⁴

6. Matters Relating to the Evidence. — The fact that the prosecutor is unprepared with his evidence is not a good ground for discharging the jury,⁵ although the absence of material evidence in some cases has been held sufficient ground therefor.⁶

7. Tampering With Jury. — Whenever the trial court finds that the jury has been tampered with, a mistrial should be ordered and the jury discharged.⁷

8. Escape of Accused. — There is some conflict as to the right to discharge the jury where the prisoner escapes from custody during the progress of the trial, some cases holding that the right exists on the ground that no valid verdict can be rendered in the absence of the accused,⁸ and others that, where the accused is present at the commencement of the trial and voluntarily absents himself, the court would not be bound to discharge the jury.⁹

9. Illness or Death. — a. Of Juror. — The death or serious illness of a juror rendering it impossible to proceed with the case authorizes a discharge of the jury.¹⁰ Indeed, the statutes sometimes provide that the court may, in its discretion, swear in a new juror,¹¹ or discharge the whole jury,¹² in such cases. Such statutes do not prohibit continuing the case for a few days pending the outcome of the juror's illness, however.¹³

The character of the illness of a juror to warrant either his discharge or the discharge of the whole jury must be such as to render him incapable of a proper performance of his duties as a juror,¹⁴ although it has been held that the court is not obliged to wait until the juror is actually sick if there is every reason to believe he would become sick through longer confinement.¹⁵ Whether the illness is sufficient to incapacitate the juror is a question addressed to the court's discretion.¹⁶

c. Of Accused.—Where the accused is stricken with an illness of so serious a nature as to necessitate his absence from the court room, it is sufficient ground for a discharge of the jury.¹⁸

d. Of Court or Counsel.—The illness of the presiding judge,¹⁹ or of any member of his family,²⁰ if of such a nature as to render it impossible to proceed with the trial, will authorize discharge of the jury. So will the sickness of counsel if there be no associate counsel capable of conducting the case.²¹

After the jury have been discharged they have no authority to re-assemble and afterwards agree upon a verdict.²⁸

b. Determination of Inability.—Whether it is possible for the jury to agree is a question of fact or of mixed law and fact.²⁹ To warrant a discharge on this ground, ample time and opportunity must be given the jury for deliberation, and the court must be convinced that there is no reasonable probability that an agreement will be reached.³⁰ No definite rule can be laid down as to what will constitute a reasonable time for deliberation within the rule. This question rests in the sound legal discretion of the court which must be exercised in conformity with established rules,³¹ and with due respect to the character and the cretion send them back for further deliberation,³⁶ although such statement is proper evidence to be considered.³⁷ Nor does the mere statement of the sheriff or other officer having charge of the jury in itself warrant the discharge.³⁸

11. Absence, Misconduct and Separation of Jurors.³⁹—Misconduct on the part of either an individual juror or the whole panel, if discovered before verdict is rendered, will authorize a discharge of the jury.⁴⁰ Thus if a juror absents himself from trial, the whole jury may be discharged,⁴¹ unless the misbehaving juror is discharged and another substituted.⁴² A separation of the jury which would necessitate setting aside the verdict is sufficient ground for discharging the jury;⁴³ but where the jury is allowed to separate, their separation is not ground for discharge.⁴⁴ In some states the parties must be given an opportunity to explain the separation and show that the jurors were subjected to no corrupting influences.⁴⁵

higher grade of crime is not such a necessity as requires the discharge of the jury.⁴⁶

13. Expiration of Term and Completion of Business.—If the jury after deliberation have not been able to reach an agreement by the end of the term, the court may discharge them,⁴⁷ unless it has power to continue the term for the conclusion of the case.⁴⁸ And if all the business of the term except the case under deliberation is completed, the court cannot discharge the jury if any part of the term is expired,⁴⁹ unless the jury has been given a reasonable time for deliberation.⁵⁰ If the impaneling of the jury is not completed until the last day of the term and the court deems the remainder of the term too short for a trial of the cause, it may discharge the jury before it is charged with or sworn in the case.⁵¹

14. Discharge of a Juror.—The discharge of an incompetent juror after the jury has been accepted does not, it has been held, create a necessity for discharging the remaining eleven.⁵²

F. ASCERTAINING EXISTENCE OF GROUNDS.⁵³—The determination of the existence of the ground of the discharge rests largely and almost exclusively in the discretion of the trial court.⁵⁴ The facts must

G. CONSENT OF ACCUSED TO DISCHARGE.—Where there is a manifest necessity for the discharge of a jury,⁵⁹ or of a juror, under statute,⁶⁰ the court may discharge the jury or the juror without the consent, and even against the objection, of the accused. [b] A discharge without consent of the accused after the court charged

although it may do so with his consent.⁶² The court is not bound to discharge the jury because the defendant consents thereto, or requests it, however.⁶³

Implication and Presumption of Consent.—The assent of the accused will sometimes be implied:⁶⁴ thus it will be presumed to have been given where objection does not affirmatively appear;⁶⁵ but mere silence of the accused is not to be construed to mean consent.⁶⁶

Consent of Counsel.—The right to discharge a jury on consent of counsel of the accused has been questioned;⁶⁷ but such consent has also been held sufficient when given in the presence of the accused.⁶⁸

K. EFFECT OF DISCHARGE. — 1. On Trial and Action. — In either case, whether an individual juror or the whole panel is discharged, the trial must be begun de novo.⁸¹ The discharge of a jury in a civil action does not operate as a discontinuance.⁸²

2. On Authority of Court Over Jury. — The authority of the court over the jury terminates on their discharge,⁸³ and thereafter the court cannot recall them for further deliberation.⁸⁴ A jury after being discharged may be recalled for the purpose of putting its verdict in proper form, however;⁸⁵ but a change in matter of substance cannot then be made.⁸⁶ Where the jury separates after returning a verdict in open court, but in the absence of the defendant, it may be recalled and the verdict properly read in his presence.⁸⁷

3. As an Acquittal. — The effect of a discharge as an acquittal of a defendant is treated elsewhere in this work.⁸⁸

N. C. 529. Ore.—State v. Reinhart, 26 Ore. 466, 38 Pac. 822.

[a] Necessity of Discharge for Disagreement Presumed.—The discharge of a jury upon their reporting that they cannot agree implies that the judge assents to their conclusion and that he decides it to be necessary to discharge them without verdict, and this decision is conclusive. People v. Harding, 53 Mich. 481, 19 N. W. 155.

[a] Cannot Alter It.—Having signed their verdict and delivered it to a messenger to be deposited with the proper custodian thereof, the jury has no control over it and cannot afterwards act judicially upon it. West v. West & East R. Co., 61 Miss. 536.

[b] Where the sealed verdict returned is defective, and the jurors have been separated for a considerable time, the defect is not cured by their subsequent rendition of a new verdict, in the absence of full proof that no harm resulted to the defendant by reason of their separation. *United States v. I. DEFINITIONS, DISTINCTIONS, AND GENERAL STATEMENT.—A. GENERAL STATEMENT.—The very foundation of judicial proceedings is jurisdiction.¹ There is, however, no subject in reference to which it is more difficult to lay down precise rules by which every case can be clearly and certainly determined, than the subject of the jurisdiction of courts.² It is a subject, too, about which much has been loosely said.³ Indeed, there is probably no word in legal terminology so frequently used as the word "jurisdiction," so capable of use in a general and vague sense, and which is used so often by men learned in the law, without a due regard to precision in its application.⁴

B. JURISDICTION DEFINED.⁵—There are numerous definitions of "jurisdiction,"⁶ the substance of all of which is that it is the power to hear and determine a cause or controversy between parties to a

[a] Reason.—The court may have jurisdiction of the parties and subject matter and still be limited in its modes of procedure, and in the extent and character of its judgments, and a material departure therefrom renders the judgment void. *Windsor v. [b] Illustrations.—(1) If for instance, the action be upon a money demand, the court notwithstanding its complete jurisdiction over the subject matter and the parties, has no power to pass judgment of imprisonment in the penitentiary upon the defendant. If the action be for a libel or personal tort the court cannot order in the case a specific performance of a contract. If the action be for the possession of real property the court is powerless to admit in the case the probate of a will. Windsor v. McVeigh, 93 U. S. 274, 23 L. ed. 914. (2) If a magistrate, having authority to fine for assault and battery, should sentence the offender to be imprisoned in the penitentiary, or to suffer the punishment prescribed for homicide, his judgment would be as much a nullity as if the preliminary jurisdiction to hear and determine had not existed. Ex parte Reed, 100 U. includes power to enforce the execution of what is decreed.¹⁰

C. ORIGINAL JURISDICTION.¹¹—A court has original jurisdiction, as distinguished from appellate jurisdiction, when it has the power to entertain cases in the first instance,¹² or is the court in which an action has its origin.¹³

D. APPELLATE JURISDICTION.¹⁴—Appellate jurisdiction is the power and authority conferred upon a superior court to rehear and determine causes which have been tried in inferior courts.¹⁵ It is authority of law to act officially in the matter in hand (Jones v. Brown, 54 Iowa 74, 79, 6 N. W. 140, 37 Am. Rep. 185), (3) the power and authority to declare the law (Mills v. Com., 13 Pa. 627; Johnston v. Hunter, 50 W. Va. 52, 40 S. E. 448), (4) the power to consider and decide one way or the other, as the law may require (U. S. Geneva Furniture Mfg. Co. v. Karpen & Bros., 238 U. S. 254, 259, 35 Sup. Ct. 788, 59 L. ed. 1295; Nolen v. Riechman, 225 Fed. 812. N. Y.—Bennett v. Cole, 173 App. Div. 521, 159 N. Y. Supp. 1001. Tex.—Auto Tr. Co. v. City of Fort Worth, 182 S. W. 685), (5) the right to adjudicate concerning the subject matter in the given case (Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 268, 11 Sup. Ct. 773, 35 L. ed. 464; Munday v. Vail, 34 N. J. L. 418), (6) the power to hear and determine the subject matter in controversy between parties to the suit, to adjudicate or exercise any judicial power over them, (State of Rhode Island v. State of Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 657, 9 L. ed. 1233; Model Clothing Co. v. First Nat. Bank, etc. (Okla.), 160 Pac. 450; Parmenter v. Ray (Okla.), 158 Pac. 1183), (7) the power to adjudicate a case upon the merits, and dispose of it as justice may require. The Resolute, 168 U. S. 437, 18 Sup. Ct. 112, 42 L. ed. 533.

[b] It has been defined as the power and authority constitutionally conferred upon (or constitutionally recognized as existing in) a court or judge to pronounce the sentence of law, or to award the remedies provided by law upon a state of facts proved or admitted, referred to the tribunal for decision, and authorized by law to be the subject of investigation or action by that tribunal, and in favor of or against persons (or a res) who present themselves or who are brought before the court in some manner sanctioned by law as proper and sufficient.

not only a continuation of the exercise of the same judicial power which has been exercised in the court of original jurisdiction,¹⁶ but it necessarily implies that the original and appellate courts are capable of participating in the exercise of the same judicial power.¹⁷ The essential criterion of appellate jurisdiction is, that it revises and corrects the proceedings in a cause already instituted, and does not create that cause.¹⁸ In reference to judicial tribunals, an appellate

[a] Mandamus as Exercise of Appellate Jurisdiction.—(1) The term appellate in a constitutional provision giving a court exclusive appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases is used in its broadest sense as embracing the power and jurisdiction to review and correct proceedings of inferior courts in criminal cases. Under this rule mandamus to an inferior court to direct its action in the course of justice is an exercise of appellate jurisdiction. Brown v. State, 6 Okla. Crim. 442, 119 Pac. 447; State ex rel. Eubanks v. Cole, 4 Okla. Crim. 25, 109 Pac. 736. (2) But mandamus to an officer is the exercise of original jurisdiction. State ex rel. Eubanks v. Cole, 4 Okla. Crim. 25, 109 Pac. 736.

[b] "In Elliot, App. Proc. §514, it is laid down that 'the decision of pending appeals is by no means all there is of appellate jurisdiction, for appellate jurisdiction extends much further; it includes the power to remove obstacles to appeals, the power to assist a party to perfect an appeal, and the power to compel decisions by inferior tribunals.' And further (section 516): 'The power to issue a writ of mandamus in aid of appellate jurisdiction is much more comprehensive than fugitive expressions in some of the decided cases indicate. The power is, indeed, very closely akin to an original one, but is, nevertheless, an attribute of appellate jurisdiction. It has been held that mandamus lies where the trial court refuses to entertain jurisdiction when it ought to do so, or refuses to proceed with a trial in a case where it is its duty under the law to proceed.'" Winstead v. Evans (Tex. Civ. App.), 33 S. W. 580. See gener-

jurisdiction, therefore, necessarily implies that the subject-matter has been already instituted and acted upon by some other court, whose judgment or proceedings are to be revised.¹⁹

E. EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION.—When a proceeding in respect to a certain matter can only be tried in one court, that court is said to have exclusive jurisdiction.²⁰

F. CONCURRENT JURISDICTION is that of several different tribunals, each authorized to deal with the same subject-matter.²¹ It means equal jurisdiction.²²

G. GENERAL, SPECIAL OR LIMITED JURISDICTION.—A distinction is recognized between courts of general and those of special and inferior jurisdiction.²³ Courts of common-law jurisdiction are not determined altogether by the extent of their jurisdiction as to subjects over which they may adjudicate.²⁴ They are such as exercise their powers according to the course of the common law.²⁵ It is not necessary that they have all common-law jurisdiction over every class of subjects, including all civil and criminal matters.²⁶ A court having jurisdiction only in civil cases is nevertheless a court of general jurisdiction, ally infra, VI, E, 2 and the titles "Mandamus," "Officers."

As to original jurisdiction of appellate courts, see infra, VI, C.

19. Story on the Constitution, §1761, quoted in Auditor of State v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 6 Kan. 500, 7 Am. Rep. 575; Christianson v. Farmers' Warehouse Assn., 5 N. D. 438, 67 N. W. 300, 32 L. R. A. 730.

[a] It is not sufficient, then, that there has been a decision; but there must have been a decision "by a court," "clothed with judicial authority and acting in a judicial capacity." The tribunal from which an appeal lies need not be called a court, but it must be one having the attributes of a court,—a tribunal where justice is judicially administered, that is, according to law. Acts purely executive in character cannot be reviewed. Auditor of State v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 6 Kan. 500, 7 Am. Rep. 575.

though limited to a certain class of cases.²⁷ All courts, even the highest courts, are more or less limited in their jurisdiction.²⁸ The term "limited jurisdiction," is somewhat ambiguous,²⁹ the line of demarcation between courts of general and limited jurisdiction not being so definite as is generally supposed;³⁰ it is usual to state what particular courts fall within the one class, and what within the other.³¹ The word limited, seems to be used sometimes carelessly instead of the term special.³² Where the power of a court in a particular matter is derived directly from the constitution, it is not a special jurisdiction.³³

H. CIVIL AND CRIMINAL JURISDICTION. — Civil jurisdiction is that which exists when the subject-matter is not of a criminal nature;³⁴ it simply means jurisdiction to hear and determine civil actions.³⁵

Civil stands for the opposite of criminal, and hence we have courts known as courts of civil jurisdiction and of criminal jurisdiction, distinguished by the character of the prosecutions in each." Landers v. Staten Island R. Co., 53 N. Y. 450, 456, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. S.) 346. See also Matter of City of Buffalo, 139 N. Y. 422, 34 N. E. 1103.

JURISDICTION OF SUBJECT-MATTER.³⁷ — The phrase "jurisdiction of the subject-matter" means, not only authority to hear and determine the class of actions to which the particular case belongs,³⁸ but authority to hear and determine the particular questions the court assumes to decide,³⁹ or the particular relief which it assumes to grant.⁴⁰ It means jurisdiction over the nature of the cause of action and the relief sought;⁴¹ or as sometimes stated, it is the power to adjudge concerning

J. JURISDICTION OF PERSON.⁴⁴ — Jurisdiction of the person is the power to deal with the person of the defendant and to render a personal judgment against him;⁴⁵ and consists in a right to determine the controversy between them, and ultimately compel them to submit to its decision.⁴⁶

K. DISTINCTIONS. — 1. Power Distinguished. — Although there is a distinction in some respects between "power" and "jurisdiction,"⁴⁷ and they are considered as distinct in some cases,⁴⁸ "power" includes "jurisdiction," as a rule.⁴⁹ The distinction is often brought out when applied to courts of chancery,⁵⁰ the jurisdiction being denied where the power exists, but ought not to be exercised.⁵¹ If, in a particular case, the court determines that it cannot enforce any decree which

(2) It is not confined to cases in which the particular facts constitute a good cause of action or ground for relief, but it includes every issue within the scope of the general power vested in the court by the law of its organization to deal with the abstract question. United States v. Ness, 230 Fed. 950, 145 C. C. A. 144; Foltz v. St. Louis, Ry. Co., 60 Fed. 316, 8 C. C. A. 635.

[b] But where, from the terms of the grant, it is evidently the intention it may render in the premises,⁵² or where the court is not in condition to do full justice,⁵³ it will refuse to exercise jurisdiction.

2. Practice Distinguished.—Jurisdiction is to be distinguished from practice or procedure.⁵⁴

3. Exercise and Excess of Jurisdiction Distinguished.—Jurisdiction is to be distinguished from the exercise of jurisdiction.⁵⁵ When jurisdiction has attached, all that follows is but the exercise of jurisdiction,⁵⁶ any movement by the court is the exercise of jurisdiction.⁵⁷

Excess of jurisdiction, as distinguished from absence of jurisdiction, means that an act, though within the general power of the judge, is not authorized and is void, with respect to the particular case, because the conditions which alone authorize the exercise of his general power in the case are wanting.⁵⁸

4. Inherent Jurisdiction and Power.—The difference between the jurisdiction of courts and their inherent powers is very important.⁵⁹ Courts possess implied and resulting powers from general grants of jurisdiction, but they have no inherent jurisdiction,⁶⁰ if, by that, is meant a power which a court may exercise without a law authorizing it.⁶¹

Statutes sometimes give a court general equity jurisdiction,⁶² and such court has the same jurisdiction as the high court of chancery of England.⁶³ This is called the inherent jurisdiction of the chancery court, and that which has subsequently vested by act of the legislature is called the statutory jurisdiction.⁶⁴

II. ESSENTIALS.—A. GENERALLY.—What shall be an element of jurisdiction, except as this may be controlled by constitutional safeguards is to be determined by the legislature;⁶⁵ and every fact which it so declares shall exist before a court can lawfully hear and determine a cause is a jurisdictional fact, an element of jurisdiction in the particular case.⁶⁶ To constitute jurisdiction there are three essentials, first, the court must have cognizance of the class of cases to which the one to be adjudged belongs; second, the proper parties, must be present; and third, the point decided must be, in substance and effect, within the issue;⁶⁷ but it must be understood, however, that

(2) As to such powers, however, as are necessary to the orderly and efficient exercise of jurisdiction, from both their nature and their ancient exercise, they are sometimes regarded as inherent. They do not depend upon express constitutional grant, nor in any sense upon the legislative will. Hale v. State, 55 Ohio St. 210, 45 N. E. 199, 60 Am. St. Rep. 691, 36 L. R. the power to pronounce the resulting judgment constitutes a part of the subject-matter over which the jurisdiction extends.⁶⁸ Some authorities have stated the essentials of jurisdiction as being a court created by law, organized and sitting;⁶⁹ authority given such court to hear and determine causes of the kind in question;⁷⁰ power given such court by law to render a judgment such as it assumes to render;⁷¹ authority over the parties to the case, acquired by their appearance or the service of process on them, if the judgment is to bind them personally and not merely as a judgment in rem;⁷² authority over the thing adjudicated upon by its being located within the court's territory, and by actually seizing it if liable to be carried away, if the judgment is to be in rem;⁷³ and authority to decide the particular question involved, which, if the other essential elements of jurisdiction exist, is acquired by the question being submitted to it by the parties for decision.⁷⁴

[a] Plea Denying Existence of Court.—There is no such thing known to the science of pleading as a plea denying the very existence of the court before which the plea is filed, and, in the nature of things, there cannot be, for no court can pass upon the validity of its own constitution and organization. It must always decide that it is a court, because the moment it is admitted that it does not exist, and has never existed, as a legal entity, so as to speak, it is at once settled that it never had the power to decide anything, not even the plea denying that it ever was a court. How can a body, having no legal existence, and consequently no judicial power or authority, if the court has a legal existence, if at the particular time the particular judgment was rendered the court was not in session, it is but the act of the judge, not the court, and is a nullity.⁷⁶

C. NECESSARY PARTIES.⁷⁷ — Though it is said in some early cases that the absence of necessary parties renders the court without jurisdiction,⁷⁸ unless they come within the exception dispensing with all necessary parties where they are numerous,⁷⁹ the want of proper or necessary parties does not deprive the court of jurisdiction as to the parties before the court,⁸⁰ however necessary they may be to a complete adjudication;⁸¹ but the principle of due process of law precludes

[a] The reason of this is obvious. Jurisdiction exists wherever there is a suit, the subject-matter of which is cognizable in a court of chancery, and parties are before the court whose rights in relation to such adjudication between the parties, until reversed or set aside, does not depend upon the fact that the power of the court may have been erroneously exercised in making it. If there be necessary parties wanting, whose absence may render the adjudication fruitless or ineffectual, because the rights of such parties cannot be determined, that may be good cause for arresting proceedings or dismissing the suit, but it does not deprive the court of the power to proceed. Tod v. Crisman, 123 Iowa 693, 701, 99 N. W. 686.

81. Tod v. Crisman, 123 Iowa 693, 700, 99 N. W. 686.

[a] It does not follow, however, that a decree entered in the absence of necessary parties is not binding on those before the court. The rule laid down by the authorities is that in no case does the court's jurisdiction over subject-matter and the parties properly before it depend upon the absence of other parties, however necessary these may be to a complete adjudication. Undoubtedly those who have not been made parties may collaterally dispute the decree and deny its validity, and probably it should not be regarded as an obstacle to them in obtaining any relief to which they may be entitled. But its efficacy between the parties before the court does not depend upon the fact that others may or ought to have been made parties. Their absence is not a defect involving the jurisdiction of the court over the parties who are present, or over the subject-matter of the suit, in so far as those parties are concerned. The court may nevertheless proceed to a decree, and such decree, though rendered in violation of the rules and the court from adjudicating upon the rights of persons not parties to the litigation.⁸² Their absence is not a defect involving the jurisdiction of the court over the parties who are present, or over the subject-matter of the suit, in so far as those parties are concerned,⁸³ but the court should direct that the necessary parties be brought in, and refuse to proceed to a determination of the controversy so as to affect their rights, until they are brought in,⁸⁴ though where it appears that necessary and indispensable parties are beyond the reach of the jurisdiction of the court,⁸⁵ or that when made parties the jurisdiction of the court will thereby be defeated, to grant leave to amend would be useless and the cause will be dismissed.⁸⁶

D. POINTS DECIDED MUST BE WITHIN ISSUES.—Courts have no jurisdiction to adjudicate matters not involved in the issues in causes pending before the court;⁸⁷ but must have properly before it the particular question it assumes to decide,⁸⁸ any decree or judgment relating to matters beyond the issues being void.⁸⁹ An exception to this rule exists, however, where the parties, by agreement, in open court, permit practice of equity in such cases, is not void as between the parties to it. It is irregular, but not void. It binds the parties to it until set aside in some direct proceeding for that purpose. Tod v. Crisman, 123 Iowa 693, 700, 99 N. W. 636.

matters to be adjudicated not involved in the issues in the cause.⁹⁰ Yet from this it by no means follows that if it wrongly decides a question within the issues, it thereby exceeds its jurisdiction.⁹¹

III. NECESSITY FOR JURISDICTION AND ITS EXERCISE.

A. IN GENERAL. — The first and fundamental requisite to the validity of a judgment is that it should have been rendered by a court having jurisdiction,⁹² for without jurisdiction the courts can do nothing.⁹³ Thus, in order that the judgment rendered may be binding in personam, it is essential that the court rendering the judgment have jurisdiction of the person and of the subject-matter,⁹⁴ and of the particular question which it assumes to decide,⁹⁵ and if either is non-existent the judgment is void,⁹⁶ being in legal effect no judgment at

[a] It cannot act upon persons who

are not legally before it, upon one who is not a party to the suit, upon a plaintiff who has not invoked its arbitrament, or upon a defendant who has never been notified of the proceedings. It cannot adjudicate upon a subject which does not fall within its province as defined or limited by law. Neither can it go beyond the issues, and pass upon a matter which they neither submitted nor intended to submit for its determination. Isham v. Sienknecht (Tenn.), 59 S. W. 779.

general and special jurisdiction,² with this difference that the jurisdiction of a court of general jurisdiction will be presumed until the contrary appears, whereas that of an inferior court must be shown.³ Notwithstanding the court may have jurisdiction over the subject-matter and the person, this does not validate any judgment that may be rendered in the cause.⁴ A judgment may be valid to the extent of the jurisdiction and invalid beyond,⁵ as where the court enters a decree in excess of the authority vested in the court.⁶ On the other hand, if the court which rendered the judgment had jurisdiction of the class of cases to which it belongs, its decision though erroneous is valid and binding until reversed or set aside by some appropriate proceeding.⁷ Such jurisdiction must exist at the time the jurisdiction is invoked or exercised. That it is subsequently conferred does not validate prior proceedings.⁸

B. RIGHT TO DECIDE OWN JURISDICTION.—1. In General.—It is necessary that every court should so far entertain a case as to determine whether it has jurisdiction. To this extent it must adjudicate, or another judge sustaining the jurisdiction.¹⁷ The right to exercise such power, however, does not authorize a court to reach out and assume jurisdiction in each and every case to which its attention may be called.¹⁸ When a statute prescribes that some fact must exist before jurisdiction can attach in any court, such fact must exist before there can be jurisdiction, and the court cannot acquire jurisdiction by erroneously deciding that the fact exists, and that it has jurisdiction.¹⁹ If a court should decide that it has power to try a cause and render a judgment, where by law it has no such power, that decision does not give the power,²⁰ especially where the constitution of the state denies such jurisdiction to it,²¹ and notwithstanding, subsequent to the commencement of the suit, the jurisdiction of the court is enlarged.²²

2. Authority After Determining Court Has No Jurisdiction.

When a court has determined that it has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of an action, it cannot properly consider any other question raised in the case,²³ and is without authority to render judgment on court, an issue of fact arises, upon the trial of which the parties are entitled to a jury, and which cannot, therefore, be tried upon affidavits, even with the consent of the parties. The proper practice in such cases is to have the case set down for trial upon competent evidence.

[a] The question (1) as to whether a cause of action arose within the state so as to give the court jurisdiction is to be determined from the petition or complaint without respect to affidavits. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. New York, S. & W. R. Co., 12 Misc. 230, 33 N. Y. Supp. 1081, 67 N. Y. St. 784. See also infra, III, C. (2) But the court is not bound to dismiss a cause merely because the defendant alleges the amount in controversy is beyond the jurisdiction of the court. It has a right to inquire into the correctness of the averment. State v. Voorhies, 34 La. Ann. 1142.

19. Roderigas v. East River Sav. Inst., 63 N. Y. 460, 20 Am. Rep. 555.

[a] There is a clear distinction between the finding of a jurisdictional fact and the decision of a court, that, as a matter of law, it has jurisdiction over a cause of action, where it has none. In the one case it has authority to try the facts. In the other case it has no authority at all, though it decides that it has. Wanzer v. Howland, 10 Wis. 8.

[b] Conclusiveness of Decision. Where general jurisdiction is given to a court over any subject, and that jurisdiction depends in the particular case, upon facts which must be brought before the court for its determination upon evidence, and where it is required to act upon such evidence, its decision upon the question of its jurisdiction is conclusive until reversed, revoked or vacated, so far as to protect its officers and all other innocent persons who act upon the faith of it. Roderigas v. East River Sav. Inst., 63 N. Y. 460, 20 Am. Rep. 555. See generally the title "Res Judicata."

[a] It becomes the court, in all cases, to stay proceedings, whenever it is made manifest that it has not jurisdiction in the case. Whenever this knowledge is obtained, it matters not whether it be by an inspection of its

any other pleas or exceptions in the case,²⁴ or to determine the title to the property in controversy, or to assess damages for its value;²⁵ and the court should express no opinion upon the merits of the controversy;²⁶ though it may make such orders as are necessary to put the parties in the same position they were prior to the suit,²⁷ and to have the case stricken from the docket.²⁸ Even the appellate court has no jurisdiction except to reverse the illegal proceedings below where the trial court had no jurisdiction. It cannot remand the cause to the trial court for further proceedings,²⁹ except to dismiss or strike the case from the docket.³⁰

C. TESTS OF JURISDICTION.³¹—The test of the jurisdiction of the court to grant relief is not whether good cause for granting the relief exists,³² but whether the tribunal assuming to act had power to enter upon the inquiry in the particular case, or grant the relief for any cause,³³ and this must be sought for in the general nature of the proceedings, or is suggested by an amicus curiae. Chalmers v. Hack, 19 Me. 124. As to stay of proceedings, see generally the title "Supersedeas and Stay of Proceedings."

powers of the court or the general laws defining its jurisdiction.³⁴ It does not depend upon whether its conclusion in the course of it is right or wrong,³⁵ nor whether its methods were regular.³⁶ So also, the jurisdiction of the court can never depend upon its decision upon the merits of the case brought before it, but depends upon its right to hear and decide it at all.³⁷ The question is, whether on the case before the court, their action is judicial or extra judicial; with or without authority of law to render judgment or decree upon the rights of the litigant parties.³⁸ If the law confers the power to render a judgment or decree in the particular case, then the court has jurisdiction.³⁹ It does not relate to the rights of the parties, as between them-

The question of its existence is an abstract inquiry, not involving the existence of an equity to be enforced, nor the right of the plaintiff to avail himself of it if it exists. [a] Allegations Determine Jurisdiction.—When a party appears before a judicial tribunal and alleges that a certain right is denied him and the law has given the tribunal the power to enforce that right—his adversary being notified—it must proceed to determine the truth or falsity of his allegations. The truth of the allegations does not constitute jurisdiction. The tribunal must have jurisdiction before it can take any adverse step. Its jurisdiction, necessarily, has to be determined from the allegations, assuming them to be true. Gaw v. Glassboro Novelty G. Co., 20 Ohio Cir. Ct. 416, 11 Ohio Cir. Dec. 32, quoting from Van Fleet's Collateral Attack, §60.

[b] The jurisdiction of a court to entertain a cause, and the right of the plaintiff in such cause to finally prevail, present essentially different questions; the former is determined from an inspection of the record, the other results from a consideration of the facts as established by the proof. *Young v. not.⁴⁶ But behind all this, there must be power in the court, conferred by law, to act in a real case of the character of the one supposed by the pleading or complaint.⁴⁷ The defense which the defendant sets up in his answer has no influence in determining the question of jurisdiction.⁴⁸ If the petitioner presents such a case in his petition that on a demurrer the court would render a judgment in his favor, it is an undoubted case of jurisdiction,⁴⁹ for jurisdiction is the power to consider and decide one way or the other as the law may require.⁵⁰ Whether a complaint does or does not state a cause of action, is, so far as concerns the question of jurisdiction, of no importance.⁵¹ If the court has jurisdiction over the general subject to which the particular case belongs, the fact that the complaint does not state a cause of action does not go to the jurisdiction;⁵² it merely goes to the character of the judgment that should be rendered.⁵³

[a] "The rule itself is founded upon the idea that the peace and good order of society require that a matter once

ings be by the course of the common law or by statute law,⁵⁶ or be in the acquisition of jurisdiction of the person of defendant, by making either active or constructive service of the summons on him;⁵⁷ and the same rule applies as to the regularity of subsequent proceedings in the exercise of its jurisdiction.⁵⁸

The United States courts are courts of general jurisdiction within the above rules, notwithstanding their jurisdiction is limited by the constitution of the United States and the laws passed in pursuance thereof.⁵⁹

b. Courts With Special Powers.—A court of general jurisdiction may have special and summary powers, wholly derived from statutes, not exercised according to the course of the common law, and which do not belong to it as a court of general jurisdiction.⁶⁰ In such cases, its decisions must be regarded and treated like those of courts of limited and special jurisdiction.⁶¹ The jurisdiction in such cases, both as to the subject-matter of the judgment, and as to the persons to be affected by it, must appear by the record, and everything will be presumed to be without the jurisdiction which does not distinctly appear to be within it.⁶² The qualifications here made, however, that the spe-litigated and determined shall be regarded as determined for all time, or that rights of person and property, once determined, ought not to be again put in jeopardy. A cognate principle underlies the criminal law and finds expression in the constitutional provision that no man's life or liberty shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense. . . . This limitation is founded upon the trust and confidence which the law puts in that class of courts which it does not place in other courts which are inferior or not of record, or not of general, but limited or special jurisdiction. This discrimination is in turn founded upon considerations of the wisest policy, which are obvious to all. Courts of record are presided over by men of experience and learned in the law, assisted by counsel also of experience and learning, who, in the discharge of their duties to their clients, necessarily act as the advisers of the court. Their proceedings are conducted with solemnity and deliberation and in strict conformity with established modes, with which long experience has made court and bar familiar, and above all they are taken down and made a matter of record at or about the time they transpire. Of inferior courts, as a general rule, none of these things can be affirmed." Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 409, 94 Am. Dec. 742.

56. Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 94 Am. Dec. 742.

[a] The use of the words "superior" and "inferior," or "limited" and "general," and "proceeding according to the course of the common law," in the statement of the rule in question, however apt they may have once been, are less so at this time and place, and their duties, in view of our system and mode of procedure, would be better performed by the terms "courts of record" and "courts and tribunals not of record." If anything further is added, the phrase "proceeding according to the course of the statute which regulates proceedings in civil cases" should be employed instead of the phrase under consideration, for the statute has superseded the common law, without however abrogating the rule in hand, the conditions being changed but not the principle. Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 414, 94 Am. Dec. 742.

cial powers conferred are not exercised according to the course of the common law, is important.⁶³ When the special powers conferred are brought into action according to the course of that law, that is, in the usual form of common law and chancery proceedings, by regular process and personal service where a personal judgment or decree is asked, or by seizure or attachment of the property where a judgment in rem is sought, the same presumption of jurisdiction will usually attend the judgments of the courts as in cases falling within its general powers, and jurisdiction need not affirmatively appear of record.⁶⁴

This rule is applicable to the question of jurisdiction as to the subject-matter, but not as to the person,⁷⁰ and ordinarily includes all courts not of record,⁷¹ such as justice's courts,⁷² as well as quasi-judicial tribunals with special power for adjudicating in particular cases.⁷³ Probate courts are sometimes considered as courts of special and limited jurisdiction within the above rules, depending somewhat upon the matter before the court;⁷⁴ but such courts are generally considered as courts of general jurisdiction, whose jurisdictional facts need not appear of record.⁷⁵

3 Pleading Jurisdictional Facts.—This subject is treated elsewhere in this work.⁷⁶

4. Presumption as to Jurisdiction.—This subject is fully treated elsewhere.⁷⁷

E. WHERE COURT HAS JURISDICTION OF PART OF DEMAND ONLY. Where a court has jurisdiction of the general class of actions to which the proceeding belongs, and of the parties thereto and has the power to grant the principal relief sought, the mere fact that relief beyond the jurisdiction of the court is sought does not oust the jurisdiction of the court of the entire case.⁷⁸ Nor does the mere fact that a party asks a greater measure of relief than can be given without personal service deprive the court of jurisdiction to grant such relief as is proper under constructive notice.⁷⁹ If a court renders a judgment or decree which is within its authority as to part only, but includes also that which is not within its power, the excess will be a nullity, and if the valid and invalid parts are independent of each other, the whole will not be void, but only such part as is in excess of the powers of the court.⁸⁰

IV. ACQUISITION AND DIVESTITURE OF JURISDICTION.

A. SOURCES OF JURISDICTION. — 1. In General. — Jurisdiction is not self-creative, and the law establishing a court is the sole warrant for its authority, beyond which it cannot legally go.⁸⁷ In other words, courts have no jurisdiction other than such as are conferred upon them by law,⁸⁸ jurisdiction being neither a matter of sympathy nor favor on the one hand,⁸⁹ or governed by the merits of the case on the other hand.⁹⁰ Jurisdiction over the subject-matter is conferred by the sovereign authority which organizes the court, and is to be sought for in the general nature of its powers or in authority specially conferred.⁹¹ It is always conferred by law and does not rest solely upon the averments in a pleading,⁹² though such are taken into consideration in determining whether the court has jurisdiction.⁹³

Courts of statutory origin only can exercise such powers only as are directly conferred upon them by legislative enactment, and such

[a] The exercise of a power by a court (1) does not prove its rightful exercise (Ex parte Woods, 3 Ark. 532), (2) or its rightful existence (Voorhees v. The Bank of the United States, 10 Pet. [U. S.] 450, 9 L. ed. 490), (3) especially where the exercise of jurisdiction in the particular case was not challenged (Tefft, Weller & Co. v. Munshuri, 222 U. S. 114, 32 Sup. Ct. 67, 56 L. ed. 118), (4) neither custom, prescription, long usage, or precedent can give a court jurisdiction independent of statutory provisions. Clarke v. Com., 1 Munf. (15 Va.) 160.

[a] Authority to transfer a case is not authority to confer jurisdiction. The conferring of jurisdiction belongs to the law making power of the state. If, without the express power to transfer, a court should find itself in possession of a case of which it had no jurisdiction, the only thing it could do would be to dismiss it or strike it from its docket. State ex rel. Dunham v. Nixon, 232 Mo. 98, 102, 133 S. W. 336. As to transfer of causes, see generally the title "Transfer of Causes."

as may be incidentally necessary to the execution of these powers.⁹⁴ They cannot assume jurisdiction not granted,⁹⁵ and have no authority to go beyond the limits of the law of their creation,⁹⁶ no matter how urgent summary action may seem.⁹⁷ If the jurisdiction given to a court by the statute is a special and limited jurisdiction, it cannot be enlarged by intendment so as to embrace objects not expressed;⁹⁸ but must be restricted to the authority specially conferred, in the cases expressly provided for.⁹⁹

The state legislatures have no power to lessen or increase the jurisdiction of the federal courts,¹ and conversely, the United States has no power to enlarge the jurisdiction of the state courts;² nor can the United States coerce it to exercise any judicial powers but those sanctioned by the laws and constitutions of the state,³ though if congress vests the jurisdiction of violations of their laws in the state courts, and this jurisdiction is within the constitution and laws of the state, the defendant cannot object to the want of jurisdiction.⁴

2. Inherent Jurisdiction.⁵ — Mere averment or assertion of a claim or demand will not create a cause of action which the court can adjudicate, when neither law nor equity recognize that the facts upon which the claim or demand is based furnish the basis for any relief.⁶

courts is governed by constitutional provisions,¹⁵ the legislature cannot limit, abridge or take away the jurisdiction of such constitutional courts:¹⁶ but the legislature may invest such courts with additional jurisdiction,¹⁷ as long as such extension is in harmony with its character and not a usurpation of the constitutional powers of any other court.¹⁸ Where the state constitutions have prescribed the powers of each of the courts created therein and have provided that the legislature may give to certain of these courts additional jurisdiction, such additional jurisdiction may be conferred upon the courts so enumerated;¹⁹ but if no such provision is made in the constitution, the legislature cannot confer upon one of these courts jurisdiction not given it by the constitution.²⁰ Other constitutional provisions providing that specified courts shall have original jurisdiction of certain causes have been construed as not preventing the legislature from conferring concurrent jurisdiction upon another court.²¹ In other states the constitution merely specifies the courts and leaves it to the legislature to prescribe the jurisdiction thereof.²² But except as limited by the federal constitution,²³ and the constitution of the state, the legislature has power to define the jurisdiction of the courts.²⁴

B. HOW JURISDICTION IS ACQUIRED.—1. Generally.—Jurisdiction may be conferred on a court by necessary implication as effectually as by express terms.²⁵ There is no set form of words required to confer jurisdiction.²⁶ Where a new jurisdiction is created by statute, without prescribing its form of proceeding, such jurisdiction may pursue its own forms and regulations, if not inconsistent with the laws of the land;²⁷ but if the mode of acquiring and exercising that jurisdiction by the court upon which it is conferred is prescribed by statute, a substantial compliance therewith is essential to the validity of the judgment.²⁸

2. Over the Subject-Matter.—a. Court Cannot Act Sua Sponte. A court cannot act sua sponte; some party must, in some way, call upon it to act.²⁹

b. Necessity for Action, Suit or Written Pleadings.—Assuming the court has power to hear and determine the particular case, in order to confer actual jurisdiction of the particular case, or subject-matter thereof, the jurisdictional power of the court must be invoked by such measures and in such manner as is required by the local law of the tribunal,³⁰ and can be invoked only by some method known to the law.³¹ Before jurisdiction may be exercised there must be a cause legally before the court,³² which ordinarily requires its presenta-

[a] Judgment on Counterclaim After Settlement.—Upon settlement of cause by one defendant and dismissal by plaintiff, the court has no jurisdiction

tion by way of a suit,³³ and not merely by agreement,³⁴ which suit must be commenced in order to enable the court to take any judicial action in the cause,³⁵ in the manner provided for by the statute creating it.³⁶ Ordinarily jurisdiction of the subject-matter is acquired by the filing of a declaration or complaint,³⁷ containing a statement in good faith of a cause of action, which is, on its face, within the jurisdiction of the court,³⁸ whether the claim ultimately be held good or bad;³⁹ but the fact that the petition or complaint fails to state a cause of action,⁴⁰

[a] Changing Void Proceeding to Efficacious One.—The allowing of the insertion of an allegation of the residence of the plaintiff into the complaint in a divorce case was "substantially to change the cause of suit" or is defectively verified,⁴¹ or does not contain a prayer for relief,⁴² does not deprive the court of jurisdiction, though jurisdiction over the subject-matter of a suit cannot be acquired by a mere amendment subsequent to the final submission of the cause.⁴³ Especially is it true in criminal cases, that jurisdiction can only be acquired in the manner prescribed by law therefor,⁴⁴ and where formal accusation is essential for every trial for crime.⁴⁵ Without it the court acquires no jurisdiction to proceed, even with the consent of the parties.⁴⁶ But the power of a court of superior and general jurisdiction to pronounce judgment, when proceeding according to the course of the common law, does not necessarily depend upon the existence, or the filing of written pleadings by the parties.⁴⁷ Under some statutes the court acquires jurisdiction to determine a matter within its jurisdiction without formal pleadings where the parties in interest appear upon an agreed statement of facts,⁴⁸ or appear and submit their evidence and request the court to adjudicate their rights.⁴⁹

3. Over Persons.—a. Plaintiff.—The court acquires jurisdiction of the plaintiff when he applies for its power and assistance to compel the defendant to render him his rights under the law,⁵⁰ and this continues while the suit is pending, but not after judgment rendered;⁵¹ but this aid must be sought according to prescribed forms,⁵² and after invoking the action of the court upon a given state of facts he is under a statute allowing the court to permit amendments to pleadings and proceedings when they do not substantially change the cause of action or defense, since it changed a void proceeding to something efficacious. *Holton v. expressly provided for in the statutory provisions is necessarily implied.⁵⁸ Accordingly the legislatures of the various states prescribe the process through which persons or things may be brought within the jurisdiction of the court and subject to its exercise,⁵⁹ and these must be substantially complied with.⁶⁰

the constitution or statutes of a state restricts the service of process of a court to smaller territorial limits;⁶⁴ and from the time of service, the defendant is in court and charged with notice of whatever action the court has taken during the pendency of the cause.⁶⁵ Such personal service cannot be dispensed with in actions in personam, strictly judicial in character and proceeding according to the course of the common law,⁶⁶ whether the action is local or transitory,⁶⁷ unless there is a waiver thereof by a voluntary appearance of the defendant.⁶⁸

Where there has been no personal service, in the absence of a seizure of property or debts upon which the judgment of the court is to operate, power to render any judgment is lacking as the court has acquired no jurisdiction;⁶⁹ any judgment rendered in such a case is

76. State ex rel. Stengl v. Cary, 132 Wis. 501, 505, 112 N. W. 428. Where the statute expressly makes proof of service a condition precedent to the jurisdiction which it specially confers, there can be no question that proof of service must appear affirmatively before the board or other special tribunal can act.

also true where the policy of the law or the implications from the statutes require record proof of the preliminary jurisdictional steps in a proceeding.⁷⁷ Yet it does not follow that the evidence that all the steps required by the statute were taken must appear in the record, unless indeed the statute expressly, or by implication, requires it.⁷⁸

Knowledge of a suit on the part of the defendant, no matter how clearly brought home to him, will not supply the want of citation,⁷⁹ without reference to whether jurisdiction was obtained by process or not.⁸⁰ Statutory provisions to the effect that the court acquires jurisdiction from the time of the filing of the complaint do not have the effect of conferring jurisdiction of the person by the mere filing of the complaint.⁸¹

Appearance.—Jurisdiction of the defendant is also acquired by a general appearance personally or by his attorney without service of process,⁸² or even by a special appearance in some states.⁸³

[a] In Mississippi a special appearance is deemed under the code to be a general appearance for all purposes.

(B.) IN ACTIONS IN REM. — Personal service is unnecessary to jurisdiction over the property of a defendant within the territorial jurisdiction of the court; jurisdiction of the res is obtained by a seizure under process of court, whereby it is held to abide such orders as the court may make concerning it.⁸⁴ Other modes than personal service have been substituted by express provision of law, such as service by publication,⁸⁵ or notice to the agent or attorney of the party.⁸⁶ But it is well settled that service by publication cannot authorize a judgment in personam upon such notice, against a citizen of another state, resident in such other state, unless such citizen submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court in which the action against him is instituted, by voluntarily appearing in person or by agent.⁸⁷

In order for such constructive service to be effective the property must be taken by one of the provisional remedies or sought to be appropriated by some process of the court adapted to that purpose,⁸⁸ such as attachment,⁸⁹ or garnishment;⁹⁰ the judgment rendered in such case will bind only the property attached, garnisheed or taken into the possession of the court by its process.⁹¹ On the other hand, the seizure of property under attachment or garnishment does not of itself, without any service of process, give the court jurisdiction under many statutes.⁹²

While the general rule, in regard to jurisdiction in rem, requires the actual seizure and possession of the res by the officer of the court,⁹³ where the proceeding is one strictly in rem, as distinguished from one quasi in rem, and where the property is immovably situated within the jurisdiction of the court, in order to acquire jurisdiction it is not necessary to actually seize or attach the property; but it may be acquired by the mere bringing of the suit in which the claim is sought to be enforced, which is in such cases deemed equivalent to a seizure, being the open and public exercise of dominion over it for the purpose of the suit;⁹⁴ and in such case either personal service of process beyond the state, where authorized by statute,⁹⁵ or constructive service by publication is sufficient to authorize a judgment,⁹⁶ provided that the property be either seized into the possession of the court or brought within its grasp by suitable allegations in the complaint.⁹⁷ But jurisdiction of specific property may not be conferred upon a court by a suit in which neither the court nor any of the parties seek to affect it or its title. Pending suits which disclose no purpose of any one to change or to affect in any way the title to specific property of parties to them may not subject the purchasers or grantees thereof pendente lite to subsequent judgments or decrees therein which attempt to affect them.⁹⁸

Statutes sometimes authorize personal service of process out of the

[a] Quasi In Rem Proceedings. There is a large class of cases which are not strictly actions in rem, but are frequently spoken of as actions quasi in rem, because, though brought against persons, they only seek to subject certain property of those persons to the discharge of the claims asserted. Such are actions in which property of non-residents is attached and held for the discharge of debts due by them to citizens of the state, and actions for the enforcement of mortgages and other liens. Indeed, all proceedings having for their sole object the sale or other disposition of the property of the defendant, to satisfy the demands of the plaintiff, are in a general way thus designated. But they differ, among other things, from actions which are strictly in rem, in that the interest of the defendant is alone sought to be affected, that citation to him is required, and that judgment therein is only conclusive between the parties. Freeman v. Alderson, 119 U. S. 185, 7 Sup. Ct. 165, 30 L. ed. 372.

[a] Reason of Rule.—The theory upon which, in proceedings purely in rem a seizure is notice and gives jurisdiction is, that the res, if not in the possession of the owner himself, is intrusted to an agent who has the power, and whose duty it is, to represent the owner and protect his interests (Dorr's Admr. v. Rohr, 82 Va. 359, 3 Am. St. Rep. 106), or as stated by the United States supreme court, "The law assumes that property is always in the possession of its owner, in person or by agent; and it proceeds upon the theory that its seizure will inform him, not only that it is taken into the custody of the court, but that he must look to any proceedings authorized by law upon such seizure for its condemnation and sale." Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 727, 24 L. ed. 565.

in civil cases.²⁴ Thus the parties cannot stipulate to have the court decide matters not raised by the pleadings,²⁵ or determine a case involving an amount in excess of,²⁶ or less than,²⁷ the jurisdictional limit of the court, or try an offense committed in another county,²⁸ or to decide matters in a certain action which would extend the jurisdiction of the court,²⁹ or to try a local suit in county other than where the land lies,³⁰ or to determine disputed land titles where it has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter.³¹ Nor can consent confer upon a court of equity, jurisdiction of a cause exclusively cognizable in a common-law court,³² unless authorized by statute,³³ but in those cases involving matters of contract and the like, which do not come within the ordinary jurisdiction of a court of equity merely because they lack some equitable element, equity may try the case if the parties fail to object,³⁴ or stipulate thereto.³⁵

The institution of a suit by the plaintiff in a court which has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter is not such consent as to preclude him from raising the objection,³⁶ but it is otherwise if he institutes such suit in a court having general jurisdiction of the subject-matter,³⁷ as jurisdiction of a particular case³⁸ falling within the scope of the general subject-matter of a court's jurisdiction, may be given by consent or by waiver.

No stipulation of parties or counsel can enlarge the power of the court to pass upon moot questions or abstract propositions not actually involved in a pending controversy between parties before the court.³⁹ And if a court having had jurisdiction over a cause has lost it, the parties cannot restore its jurisdiction by consent,⁴⁰ or by failure to object.⁴¹ Nor can jurisdiction to try a cause be conferred by consent where the court failed to convene in regular session at the time fixed by law,⁴² or where the court is illegal,⁴³ where the term is adjourned by operation of law,⁴⁴ or where the judge goes beyond the territorial jurisdiction of his court.⁴⁵ If the court has jurisdiction, however, of the subject-matters involved, but the prohibition is merely to the consideration thereof at one and the same trial, consent of the parties will give the court jurisdiction to determine the matters in one suit.⁴⁶

The lack of jurisdiction of the federal court to maintain an action relating to property involved in a prior action in a state court cannot be waived, even by consent, as a court will not knowingly invade the jurisdiction of another court.⁴⁷ While consent cannot confer upon a tribunal a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, yet parties may, by consent, permit a tribunal to acquire, though irregularly, a jurisdiction which the law has conferred upon it;⁴⁸ but if a court has not capacity

[a] Statutory Proceeding of Appeal From Assessing Body.—This rule is not applicable to a special statutory proceeding to correct an erroneous assessment of taxes. Even though the district court would, in a proper case, have original jurisdiction to annul a void or illegal tax laid upon non-assessable property, it has no such jurisdiction, upon appeal from the board of county commissioners in the statutory proceeding to correct erroneous assessments, although no objection was made to the jurisdiction. Arapahoe County v. Denver Union Water Co., 32 Colo. 382, 76 Pac. 1060.

[b] Effect of Amendment.—Upon appeal from the judgment of a justice if the cause of action be changed by amendment and so enlarged as to exceed the jurisdiction of a justice, without objection, and the parties proceed to the trial of the issues thus changed, in the higher court without objection, they will be presumed to have waived the objection. *Jackson v. c. Change of Venue by Consent.⁵⁷ — Applying the foregoing rule a change of venue may not be had by consent of the parties to a court not having jurisdiction of the cause,⁵⁸ though where a change of venue has been had the jurisdiction may be restored by consent.⁵⁹

After a change of venue has been ordered to a wrong county, it is competent for the parties to come into court by consent, have the order rescinded, and give the court jurisdiction of their person.⁶⁰

2. As to the Person. — The rule that jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent applies only where the court has not the right to assume general jurisdiction of the subject-matter of an action,⁶¹ and it is well settled that jurisdiction over the person of the defendant may be conferred by consent, express or implied, if the court has jurisdiction over the subject-matter,⁶² although it has been held that jurisdiction of the person cannot be waived so as to prejudice the

[a] This rule is not changed by a statute providing that upon appeal the cause shall be tried upon the merits and all errors, irregularities and illegalities are to be disregarded if the cause might have been instituted in such court, as such statute means something less than jurisdictional questions. McMeans v. Cameron, 51 Iowa 691, 49 N. W. 856.

son, but a special appearance will not have this effect, however.⁶⁸ A statute prescribing the place where a person may be sued is not one affecting the general jurisdiction of the courts,⁶⁹ but is rather a personal exemption which may be waived.⁷⁰ But when residence of the plaintiff,⁷¹ or defendant,⁷² within the limits of the court is a jurisdictional fact which must exist before the court can act at all, it is essential to jurisdiction of the cause not of the person. In such case there can be no waiver, and the mere appearance of the parties does not cure the defect.⁷³

D. LOSS OR DIVESTITURE OF JURISDICTION.—1. Construction of Statutes.—When a court acquires jurisdiction, it can only divest itself or be divested of that jurisdiction in a statutory method.⁷⁴ In dealing with statutes intended or claimed to affect the continuance of jurisdiction in courts of original and general authority, the law has always recognized a principle of construction which served to favor the retention of jurisdiction.⁷⁵ In other words the law does not favor the ouster of jurisdiction of courts after it has once attached,⁷⁶ and when once given, jurisdiction is not to be taken away by implication from either a trial,⁷⁷ or an appellate court,⁷⁸ especially if the jurisdiction

[a] Suspension of Jurisdiction. Jurisdiction is either exhausted or retained. It can never be properly said to be in a state where it is suspended and can be revived. The exercise of it by the court possessing it may be and often is suspended, but it still continues to exist, and only awaits the determination of the court as to when and how it shall be called into action. Sanford v. Sanford, 28 Conn. 6, 15.

thus sought to be taken away would have to be conferred by implication upon an inferior court of special, limited jurisdiction.⁷⁹ The jurisdiction of any court, in civil actions will not usually be defeated by rigid construction, where the matter is fairly doubtful.⁸⁰ Before it can be claimed that an act is to have the effect to absolutely divest a jurisdiction which has regularly and fully vested, the law in favor of it must be clear and unambiguous,⁸¹ and the court will lose its jurisdiction only in the case and in the way and manner prescribed.⁸² Hence, statutes depriving courts of their jurisdiction, particularly where it has already attached, are to be strictly interpreted,⁸³ and if a court has possessed and exercised jurisdiction over a subject-matter, the subsequent extension of jurisdiction over the same subject-matter to another court does not oust the jurisdiction of the first court in the absence of a repealing clause or words of exclusion in the later act.⁸⁴

As a general rule a statute conferring power upon a court in special, enumerated cases, is not to be construed as divesting a general jurisdiction in cases of an analogous nature not enumerated.⁸⁵ The fact that there is a specific remedy in equity does not necessarily oust the jurisdiction of a common-law court, but only appeals to its discretion, which may be exercised where the circumstances call for prompt interference by the courts.⁸⁶

2. By Subsequent Events.—It does not follow that jurisdiction once acquired always remains. A court or judge may have authority at one time to proceed, and his authority may afterward be divested by statute,⁸⁷ or by the settlement of the controversy.⁸⁸ In the absence

[a] By Removal of Property. Where the situs of the piece of property is in one state, the court there having acquired jurisdiction over it, does not lose that jurisdiction upon the temporary removal of the piece of property from that state. North Carolina Land & Lumb. Co. v. Boyer, 191 Fed. 552, 112 C. C. A. 162, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 627.

[b] Change of County Boundaries. Jurisdiction once vested is not ousted by a subsequent statute cutting off the land and placing it in another county, where the court had jurisdiction under a special statute. Graham's Heirs v. Kitchen, 118 Ky. 18, 80 S. W. 464.

[c] Failure of judge to appear within one hour after time set for trial of cause does not divest court of jurisdiction under Nebraska statute. Bussing v. Taggart, 73 Neb. 787, 103 N. W. 430.

[e] Absence of Party's Attorney. That the plaintiff's attorneys upon the overruling of a motion for an abatement of a certain branch of the case left the courtroom, does not defeat the jurisdiction of the court over the plaintiff. Hoover v. Hedrich (Iowa), 155 N. W. 851.

[f] Dissolution of an attachment on defendant's special appearance does not divest the court of jurisdiction to further proceed. Griffin Co. v. Howell, 38 Utah 357, 113 Pac. 326.

[g] Lapse of Lien.—Where a lien for materials furnished directly to the owner is in force at the time of the commencement of proceedings to enforce it, but ceases during the pendency of the proceedings, because of failure to obtain an order for its continuance, the court having acquired jurisdiction may retain it, and render a personal judgment. jurisdiction from attaching in the first instance,⁹⁰ unless it be in the case of a change in the parties after the commencement of a suit, so as to work an abatement.⁹¹ Thus where the court has acquired jurisdiction of a cause and the parties, the statute remaining in force, it does not lose jurisdiction by any change in the condition of the parties,⁹² such as imprisonment in the penitentiary,⁹³ by the adjudication of bankruptcy of the complainant or cross-complainant,⁹⁴ by the acceptance of a foreign consulship by a litigant,⁹⁵ or by the removal of a trustee from the state,⁹⁶ or by a change in residence where jurisdiction is based upon residence,⁹⁷ or by the death, removal from the county, or resignation from office of one of the defendants.⁹⁸ Nor does a court lose jurisdiction of the estate of an insane person by the fact that the insane person is confined in another jurisdiction.⁹⁹ For the same reason where jurisdiction depends upon the amount in controversy, jurisdiction is not lost by a reduction of the amount by confession or otherwise.¹ Nor will the death, removal, or resignation,² or dismissal,³ as to the resident defendant, oust the court of jurisdiction to proceed as to the non-resident defendants over whom jurisdiction was obtained.

Jurisdiction when once vested is not defeated by the transfer of the note or claim sued upon,⁴ or by the destruction of the evidence of the indebtedness,⁵ by the appropriation of property by the plaintiff in a suit for conversion of the property,⁶ or by the return of the property to its owner.⁷ And the court does not lose jurisdiction of an action to cancel a mortgage by its subsequent foreclosure, although no temporary injunction was sought,⁸ or lose jurisdiction of a cross-complaint by the satisfaction of the claim in the original action.⁹ The doctrine of lis pendens does not affect the jurisdiction of the court,¹⁰ and the fact that an innocent purchaser may purchase personal property before trial does not oust the court of jurisdiction of an action to determine the ownership of shares of stock.¹¹ Failure to give a required indemnity bond will not oust the court's jurisdiction.¹²

If the court has no jurisdiction to try title to land, it will lose jurisdiction of a cause as soon as it appears that there is a bona fide contest as to title,¹³ unless the question of title is merely incidentally involved.¹⁴

In the administration of municipal affairs jurisdiction is often given by statute to tribunals to act upon petition of a certain number of legal voters. tion,¹⁷ does not lose it by reason of any subsequent errors committed in the course of the trial or proceedings. The court does not lose jurisdiction because of the character of the decision which it may make upon any proposition before it,¹⁸ or, ordinarily, by failure of proof, or by sustaining a demurrer as to part of the demand and thereby reducing the claim below the jurisdictional amount,¹⁹ or because of the fact that for several years the case was omitted from the docket by the clerk.²⁰ A code provision that upon proof of default the court "shall" thereupon enter judgment, is not mandatory in the sense that failure to enter judgment immediately will result in loss of jurisdiction.²¹ Nor does a court lose jurisdiction because one of its members necessary to make a duly organized court, is called from the bench as a witness in the action,²² or by reason of the fact that the court fails to decide a cause within a specified time after its submission,²³ unless the statute so provides,²⁴ or by the entry of a dismissal which the court afterwards set aside,²⁵ nor because the judge by mistake tells the defendant that there is no case set for that date.²⁶

14 Idaho 681, 95 Pac. 825. (2) Failure to sit at time to which case is adjourned does not deprive court of jurisdiction under statute. Langhorne v. Waller's Exr., 76 Va. 213.

[c] The continuance (1) of a case till next term of court does not deprive the court of jurisdiction over the parties for the term at which it is made, so as to deprive it of power to set aside the continuance and try the case. Kan.—Gray v. Ulrich, 8 Kan. 112. Mo.—Marsh v. Morse, 18 Mo. 477. Tex.—Cohen v. Moore, 101 Tex. 45, 104 S. W. 1053. (2) Erroneous adjournment of a cause by a justice of the peace contrary to the agreement of the parties does not deprive the court of jurisdiction. Hard v. Shipman, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 621.

[d] Omission To Show Regular Adjudgments.—Where supplementary proceedings were instituted in April, 1875, and plaintiff was appointed receiver therein in February, 1878, and it was not shown that the proceedings were adjourned from time to time, the court would not presume a loss of jurisdiction from the omission to show regular adjournments. Wright v. Nosstrand, 94 N. Y. 31, reversing 15 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 441.

[e] An erroneous decision (1) on matters of law that it has no jurisdiction (Griffin Co. v. Howell, 38 Utah 357, 113 Pac. 326), (2) or any erroneous judgment which it may render, and which after ascertaining the error, it caused to be vacated (Kent v. Williams, 146 Cal. 3, 79 Pac. 527), does not oust the court of jurisdiction.

acquired is not lost by any subsequent elimination of allegations essential to the complaint,²⁷ or by the addition of a supplemental cause of action,²⁸ or by an amendment averring additional matter which the court is not competent to consider,²⁹ or by the filing of an amended petition out of time,³⁰ or by pleading a counterclaim, or claim in re-convention, or intervention, of which the court has not original jurisdiction,³¹ or by pleading a defense which is available in another jurisdiction only,³² or by sustaining a demurrer to the answer,³³ or by striking defendant's answer from the files of the cause.³⁴ Jurisdiction over a cause of action is not lost by the fact that the petition states two causes of action over one of which it has no jurisdiction,³⁵ or because defendant denies plaintiff's title to the land involved in the suit,³⁶ or the truth of the allegations contained in the original bill in respect to the amount in dispute,³⁷ or because a defense is established to the whole or any portion of the claim, whether by demurrer, or by evidence on the trial.³⁸

5. By Change in County Boundaries.—Where a suit was commenced in the proper county, it will not be defeated by the subsequent division of the county.³⁹ Nor does a court having jurisdiction of a proceeding relating to land lose jurisdiction by a change in the county boundaries so that the land lies in another county.⁴⁰

6. Absence of Party.—Absence of a party from the trial cannot deprive the court of jurisdiction to proceed unless, indeed, there be some statutory provision to that effect.⁴¹ Statutes sometimes provide that the defendant is not bound to remain more than a specified time after the time fixed for trial, if the plaintiff fails to appear,⁴² and under such provisions the court loses jurisdiction to render any judgment except one of nonsuit, if the plaintiff fails to appear within the specified time.⁴³

7. By Lapse of Time.—The mere fact that the court passed over from term to term without a judgment having been rendered on the findings, or any order of the court continuing the case, does not divest the court of jurisdiction, either of the subject-matter of the action, or of the person of the parties.⁴⁴

8. By Repeal of Statute.—Upon the repeal of a statute giving a court jurisdiction in particular cases, the court cannot proceed under the repealed statute even as to cases pending at the time of the repeal,⁴⁵ unless they are saved by a clause in the repealing statute.⁴⁶ And if the states.⁵⁴ The right to appeal to the courts for the redress of wrongs, is one of those constitutional rights which is in its nature inalienable, and cannot be thrown off, or bargained away.⁵⁵ Upon this principle agreements to abide the result of a submission of a cause to arbitration and not to resort to the courts for redress are invalid at common law,⁵⁶

[a] Reason.—While courts usually base their decisions upon the ground that parties cannot by contract in advance oust the courts of their jurisdiction of actions, a more satisfactory ground is that the constitution of most states provide that all courts are open, and every person, for an injury done him in his land, goods, person or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Stankard, 56 Ohio St. 224, 231, 46 N. E. 577, 60 Am. St. Rep. 745, 49 L. R. A. 381.

[b] If this could be done an association might be formed which would renounce our constitution and laws, and set up a different system of government for themselves, and in case of wrongs and oppression they would be debarred from resorting to our courts, and would be compelled to submit to the decisions of their own tribunals, and would most likely become dissatisfied and disorderly, resulting in riot and bloodshed. The whole state has an interest in all its inhabitants, and it is to its interest that the rights of all should be protected and enforced according to the course of jurisprudence it has provided; and for that reason its courts are always open for the redress of wrongs, and no person can by contract in advance, deprive himself of the right to appeal to them. Myers v. Jenkins, 63 Ohio St. 101, 120, 57 N. E. 1089, 81 Am. St. Rep. 613.

[c] A covenant never to sue upon a demand is in effect a release thereof (Contee v. Dawson, 2 Bland Ch. [Md.] 264), though where such covenant is for a limited time only and is good. Condon v. South Side R. Co., 14 Gratt. (55 Va.) 302. See annotation 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 338, 348.

words of restriction as to other courts, will be construed as not ousting the jurisdiction of other courts,⁶² since such contracts are strictly construed and should not be extended by implication.⁶³ On the other hand provisions in contracts requiring the submission to third parties and making their decision final upon preliminary, incidental, auxiliary and collateral questions, the decision of which is not conclusive of anything as to the right of the parties, are valid and enforceable.⁶⁴

There is a class of contracts which provide that the value of certain property, the amount of loss sustained, the quantity, quality, character and value of work performed on improvements, and the acceptance of a building by an architect, and other like matters, shall be determined by a certain person named in the contract, and his determination shall be final. Such contracts are lawful, and are usually upheld. They do not oust the courts of their jurisdiction over the subject matter, but only provide a safe and speedy manner of fixing definitely some fact which is usually of a complex and difficult nature,⁶⁵ and merely make

[a] The distinction between the two classes of cases is marked and well defined. In one class the parties undertake by an independent covenant or agreement to provide for an adjustment and settlement of all disputes and differences by arbitration, to the exclusion of the courts, and in the other they merely, by the same agreement which creates the liability and gives the right, qualify the right by providing that before a right of action shall accrue certain facts shall be determined or amounts and values ascertained, and this is made a condition precedent either in terms or by necessary implication. *President of D. & H. [a] Where the state accuses a person of the commission of an offense against its laws, the mere apprehension of the accused, although in an unlawful manner, and subjecting him to the jurisdiction of the courts to answer the charge cannot amount to a legal advantage any more than if the accused had voluntarily surrendered himself to the authorities. The wrongful or unlawful means employed in making an arrest, however criminal they might be, could not be chargeable to the sovereignty, which can commit no crime, but would be the crime of the individual who committed the act and would furnish no reason or justification for discharging the prisoner when brought before the court. In re Moyer, 12 Idaho 250, 85 Pac. 897, 118 Am. rights.⁷⁶ In absence of statute, courts do not exercise jurisdiction to interfere or control in matters purely political, pertaining to the management and proceedings of a political party⁷⁷ or in church questions,⁷⁸ unless there is an invasion of legal rights.⁷⁹

V. COURTS OF GENERAL ORIGINAL JURISDICTION. — A. IN GENERAL.⁸⁰ — Some courts are of general jurisdiction, by which is meant that their authority extends to a great variety of matters,⁸¹ while others are only of special and limited jurisdiction, by which it is understood that they have authority extending only to certain special cases.⁸² Whether a court is one of inferior or general jurisdiction is to be determined from the nature of the jurisdiction and not from the territorial limits within which such jurisdiction is to be exercised.⁸³

B. NATURE AND EXTENT OF JURISDICTION. — 1. In General. — Constitutional provisions in many states fix the jurisdiction of the courts,⁸⁴ and divide and distribute the whole judicial power of the state among tribunals of its own creation.⁸⁵ In such case the legislature cannot either limit or extend the jurisdiction conferred upon the various courts of the state,⁸⁶ unless the constitution authorizes it,⁸⁷ though it may regu-

[a] Statutes creating new rights and new equities, and cutting off other rights whereby certain cases cognizable in equity no longer can arise do not enlarge or diminish the jurisdiction of the court so as to render the statute unconstitutional where the statute gives a specified court exclusive jurisdiction of all equity cases. Spreckels v. Hawaiian Com. etc. Co., 117 Cal. 377, 49 Pac. 353.

87. See generally the constitutions. [a] Power given by the Constitution to the legislature to withdraw certain jurisdiction from some of the courts created by the constitution and late the jurisdiction conferred.⁸⁸ Thus if the constitution in express terms confers jurisdiction upon one court over a particular subject matter such jurisdiction is exclusive,⁸⁹ unless otherwise clearly or expressly manifested,⁹⁰ neither the lapse of time,⁹¹ nor practice of the court,⁹² can vindicate the exercise of jurisdiction under acts repugnant to the constitution.

A court cannot give itself jurisdiction by finding as a fact that which is not a fact.⁹³ Some constitutional provisions, however, merely confer general law and equity jurisdiction upon specified courts,⁹⁴ and consequently the jurisdiction of the courts of such states depends to no small extent upon the statutes of the states,⁹⁵ though they are not limited to the powers so conferred, as they possess judicial powers independent of legislation,⁹⁶ such statutes being passed not as introductory of any new power, but either as declaratory of law, as it already existed, or as directory of the mode in which the powers should be exercised as adapted to modern conditions.⁹⁷ conferring the power upon courts of its own creation, provided it is conferred upon some other tribunal or tribunals, does not preclude the legislature from abolishing a court of its own creation without conferring the jurisdiction exercised by such court upon another court. If the legislature does not put into exercise its power to supersede any of those courts which it is authorized to supersede, the mere abolition of any court of legislative creation would not result in leaving in abeyance any fraction or fragment of the judicial power of the state, as the part of such power which had been invested in the abolished court would in such event revert to the court or courts provided by the constitution for its exercise. *Lee v. It is incumbent upon those who deny jurisdiction in any particular case to point out the constitutional or statutory provision which abridges such general jurisdiction,⁹⁸ since the ordinary general jurisdiction should not be restricted, except by the unequivocal will of the legislature.⁹⁹

b. Cases Respecting Title to Land.—Statutes in some states give exclusive jurisdiction to cases involving the title or possession of lands to specified courts,⁸ or to the courts of a specified county.⁹

c. Special Cases.—Constitutional provisions in some states permit the legislature to confer upon certain courts jurisdiction in special cases.¹⁰ This clause does not include any class of cases for which courts of general jurisdiction have always supplied a remedy,¹¹ and is confined to such new cases as are the creation of statutes, and the proceedings under which are unknown to the general framework of courts of common law and equity.¹²

[a] In New York, (1) the jurisdiction of the court of appeals, except where the judgment is of death, is limited to the review of questions of law. No unanimous decision of the appellate division of the supreme court that there is evidence supporting or tending to sustain a finding of fact or a verdict not directed by the court, shall be reviewed by the court of appeals. Except where the judgment is of death, appeals to this court can be taken to this court as of right only from final judgments or orders of the appellate division and from orders granting new trials on exceptions where the appellant stipulates that judgment absolute shall be rendered against him on affirmance. The appellate division may, however, allow an appeal upon any question of law which in its opinion ought to be reviewed by the court of appeals. N. Y. Const. Art. VI, §9; *Israel v. Manhattan R. nor extend that jurisdiction,²⁰ unless the constitution so provides, as it does in some states.²¹ Where the constitution specifies the courts from which appeals may be taken to a designated court, the legislature cannot authorize an appeal from any others.²² Some constitutions merely prescribe the courts, and leave it to the legislature to define their jurisdiction,²³ and in such case the jurisdiction is wholly dependent upon the will of the legislature subject to any limitations in the constitution,²⁴ and the nature of the court.²⁵ It may be enlarged or restricted as the legislature prescribes.²⁶ The fact that no method of review has been prescribed for certain cases affords no ground for disregarding the plain text of the statute by assuming jurisdiction where none exists.²⁷

Jurisdiction over an appeal can not be taken under an unconstitutional statute.²⁸ A constitution conferring upon a specified court appellate jurisdiction only does not preclude the legislature from giving appellate jurisdiction to another court.²⁹ Notwithstanding the highest court is created by the constitution, the legislature may by the establishment of courts of intermediate appellate jurisdiction or other appropriate legislation, limit and restrict the right of litigants to resort to it, and regulate the mode of doing so, but not so as to unreasonably interfere with or embarrass its ultimate revisory powers.³⁰

The jurisdiction of supreme and appellate courts is of three kinds, appellate, original and supervisory;³¹ the first forms the principal juris-

B. APPELLATE JURISDICTION. — 1. In General. — Appellate jurisdiction is generally conferred, to a greater or lesser extent, upon all courts except the lowest such as the justice's courts.³⁸ This grant of power implies also all the instrumentalities necessary to make it effective,³⁹ and if the court obtains jurisdiction of the main case, it will thereby have jurisdiction over all matters incidental thereto.⁴⁰

2. As Dependent on the Nature or Cause of Action. — Jurisdiction of appellate courts over appeals is sometimes made dependent upon the nature of the cause of action in the case under review. This is generally the case where there are intermediate appellate courts, which may be given general appellate jurisdiction except over cases within the jurisdiction of the supreme court.⁴¹ Thus a court may be given appellate

[a] "So soon as the jurisdiction attaches under an appeal or writ of error, this court has full control of the cause and can make such orders concerning it as may be necessary to preserve the rights of the parties and enforce its mandates. This jurisdiction continues until the case, as made by the appeal or writ of error, is fully determined by this court and its judgment is completely executed by the court below. If the judgment below is affirmed, or reversed and rendered or reformed, this court can see that the party in whose favor its decision has been given has the benefit of all proceedings below necessary to enforce its judgment. If remanded for a new trial, it retains control until the new trial is allowed in accordance with its mandate. If reversed and sent down to have some special judgment rendered by the court below, jurisdiction remains till that particular judgment is entered up and the mandate of the court obeyed. For the purpose of enforcing all such orders coming within the appellate jurisdiction of the court it may resort to the writ of mandamus, or any other appropriate writ, known to our system of jurisprudence." Wells v. Littlefield, 62 Tex. 28, 30; Birchfield v. Bourland (Tex. Civ. App.), 187 S. W. 422. See also 2 STANDARD PROC. 331, and the title "Mandate and Proceedings Thereafter."

jurisdiction of cases which involve the title to or possession of real estate or an interest therein,⁴² which directly⁴³ involve a freehold,⁴⁴

[a] The title to real estate must be directly involved or the case is not within the jurisdiction of the supreme court. Branson v. Studebaker, 133 Ind. 147, 33 N. E. 98; Springfield S. W. R. Co. v. Schweitzer, 246 Mo. 122, 151 S. W. 128; Loewenstein v. Queen Ins. Co., 227 Mo. 100, 128, 127 S. W. 72; State v. Court of Appeals, 67 Mo. 199.

[b] The judgment appealed from must involve or directly affect title to real estate. Springfield S. W. R. Co. v. Schweitzer, 246 Mo. 122, 151 S. W. 128 citing cases.

[c] Where Monetary Judgment Is Rendered.—Although title to real estate be involved in the pleadings, if the judgment appealed was only a money judgment, title to real estate is not involved within the meaning of the constitution (Kennedy v. Duncan, 224 Mo. 661, 665, 123 S. W. 856, citing cases), if the parties who claim an interest in the land do not appeal, but it is otherwise if they appeal, still claiming the interest. Loewenstein v. Queen Ins. Co., 227 Mo. 100, 130, 127 S. W. 72.

[d] An action to foreclose a mechanic's lien is not an action affecting the title to real property. Norris v. Nesbit, 123 N. Y. 650, 25 N. E. 377, 3 Silv. 183.

[e] A suit on a constable's bond for failing to execute a writ of restitution does not involve title to real estate.

State v. Henning, 110 Mo. 82, 19 S. W. 494.

[f] The word "cases" in the California constitution refers to civil, as distinguished from criminal cases. People v. Johnson, 30 Cal. 98.

E. 854; Bennett v. Millard, 239 Ill. 332, 88 N. E. 165 (if a freehold is directly involved the appellate court has no jurisdiction); Harlem v. Suburban R. Co., 198 Ill. 337, 64 N. E. 1010 (defining "freehold"); Perry v. Bozarth, 198 Ill. 328, 64 N. E. 1076 (construing the constitution and statute); Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Richards, 152 Ill. 59, 38 N. E. 773, 30 L. R. A. 33; Chicago & G. W. R. L. Co. v. Peck, 112 Ill. 408, 432; Lehmann v. Rothbarth, 111 Ill. 185; Comrs. of Highways v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 34 Ill. App. 32.

[a] Whether a freehold is involved must be determined with reference to the facts under consideration. Monte Vista Canal Co. v. Centennial Irr. Ditch Co., 22 Colo. App. 364, 123 Pac. 831.

[b] A freehold is involved (1) where the title is so put in issue by the pleadings that the decision of the case necessarily involves a decision of such issue, although the judgment or decree does not result in one party gaining or the other party losing the estate (Bartley v. Peoria Park Dist., 251 Ill. 373, 96 N. E. 241; Sanford v. Kane, 127 Ill. 591, 20 N. E. 810; Hi-

which involve a franchise,⁴⁵ or which involve a constitutional question,⁴⁶

bernian Banking Assn. v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 54 Ill. App. 277), (2) and also when by the execution of the decree the defendant in error gains and the plaintiff in error loses a freehold estate. Monte Vista Canal Co. v. Centennial Irr. Ditch Co., 22 Colo. App. 364, 123 Pac. 831; Bartley v. Peoria Park Dist., 251 Ill. 373, 96 N. E. 241; Ryan v. Sanford, 133 Ill. 291, 24 N. E. 428; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Watson, 105 Ill. 217, 221; McDavid v. Sutton, 104 Ill. App. 626.

[c] It is the effect of the judgment rendered not of the judgment which might be rendered which is the test. Monte Vista Canal Co. v. Centennial Irr. Ditch Co., 22 Colo. App. 364, 123 Pac. 831.

[d] Where question of freehold depends upon the existence of a lien on land no freehold is involved even though the litigation may result in the loss of a freehold. Nor is a freehold involved if the defendant may prevent a disturbance of his title or do some act to arrest the sale. Becker v. Fink, 273 Ill. 560, 113 N. E. 49.

[e] The word freehold is used in its common-law sense. Kirchoff v. Union Mut. Life Ins. Co., 128 Ill. 199, 204, 20 N. E. 808. See Chicago & G. W. R. L. Land Co. v. Peck, 112 Ill. 408, 432; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Watson, 105 Ill. 217, 220; McIntyre v. Yates, 100 Ill. 475.

[f] A freehold may be involved by a cross-bill as well as by an original bill. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Watson, 105 Ill. 217, 221.

[g] Whether the freehold is involved as a question of law or of fact, is immaterial. Ducker v. Wear & Boogher D. G. Co., 45 Ill. App. 153.

[h] If the appeal is from an interlocutory order, it is immaterial whether the issues do or do not involve a freehold. New Ohio Washed Coal Co. v. Coal Belt Ry. Co., 116 Ill. App. 153.

[i] Waiver.—The parties may submit the case upon errors not involving the freehold and thus confer jurisdiction upon the intermediate appellate court. Bennett v. Millard, 239 Ill. 332, 88 N. E. 165; Scott v. Artman, 237 Ill. 394, 86 N. E. 595; Schmidt v. Schmidt, 277 Ill. 191, 115 N. E. 189 (citing cases); Ward v. Mississippi R. P. Co., 183 Ill. App. 305. See also

Scott v. Desire, 175 Ill. App. 215.

45. St. Louis & S. C. & M. Co. v. Edwards, 103 Ill. 472; O'Donnell v. Illinois Steel Co., 53 Ill. App. 314; Citizens' Horse Ry. Co. v. Belleville, 47 Ill. App. 388, 411, the court of appeals has no jurisdiction if the appeal involves a franchise.

[a] An appeal involves a franchise if the judgment would result in sustaining or ousting a franchise. Citizens' Horse Ry. Co. v. Belleville, 47 Ill. App. 388, 410.

[b] A "franchise" as used in the statute "means a privilege emanating from the sovereign power of the state, owing its existence to a grant, or, as at common law, to prescription which presupposes a grant and invested in individuals or a body politic something not belonging to the citizen of common right." Hazelton Boiler Co. v. Hazelton Tripod Boiler Co., 137 Ill. 231, 28 N. E. 248; Hesing v. Attorney General, 104 Ill. 292; Board of Trade v. People, 91 Ill. 80.

[c] The term is used strictly in its legal not in its broad and popular sense. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Dunbar, 95 Ill. 571, 577.

[d] An office is not a franchise within the meaning of the statute. People ex rel. Smith v. Rodenberg, 259 Ill. 78, 102 N. E. 182; People v. Holtz, 92 Ill. 426.

[e] A suit to enjoin the obstructing of a highway which a party denies to be a highway does not involve a franchise. Richards v. People, 100 Ill. 423.

the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll or municipal fine,⁴⁷ city ordinance,⁴⁸ or statute,⁴⁹ or cases where the validity of a treaty or statute of or authority exercised under the United States is drawn in question.⁵⁰ And appellate jurisdiction is sometimes given of cases relating jurisdiction if a constitutional question is involved.

[a] The constitutional question (1) must be involved in the issues of the case, and the trial court must have an opportunity to and must pass upon the question (Ross v. Grand Pants Co., 241 Mo. 296, 145 S. W. 410; Bennett v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 105 Mo. 642, 16 S. W. 947; Baldwin v. Fries, 103 Mo. 286, 15 S. (3) The question cannot be injected into the case for the first time on appeal, to confer jurisdiction. Miller v. Connor, 250 Mo. 677, 157 S. W. 81; Baldwin v. Fries, 103 Mo. 286, 15 S. W. 760. (4) The question must really exist (Kemper M. & E. Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co. [Mo.], 178 S. W. 502; Stegall v. American P. & C. Co., 263 Mo. 719, 173 S. W. 674; *Brookline Canning & P. Co. v. [b] The court's supervisory power is not vested for the purpose of interfering at every stage of the proceedings in the inferior court, and directing the conduct of business there, but only under extraordinary circumstances where there is no other legal remedy,

This power is granted in general terms and is as broad as the exigencies of the case demands,⁹² limited only by the necessities of justice,⁹³ although generally it will not be exercised if there is another remedy.⁹⁴ Another remedy is not always regarded as an insuperable obstacle to the exercise of the power, however.⁹⁵ The court's supervisory⁹⁶ control

[a] Definition.—To supervise is "to oversee for direction; to superintend; to inspect with authority;" and to control means "to exercise restraining of governing influence over; . . . to regulate; to govern; to overpower." Hutchins v. City of Des Moines (Iowa), 157 N. W. 881.

[b] Supervisory control being granted by the fundamental law, may not be restricted, save by obviating the necessity for its exercise, and opportunities for its exercise may be increased by legislation. Hutchins v. City of Des Moines (Iowa), 157 N. W. 881.

[c] In Missouri, the supreme court has no appellate jurisdiction over courts of appeals, but has superintending control over such court by mandamus, etc. This jurisdiction is not limited to the single case where a cause may be certified to the supreme court but is as broad as the exigency of the case demands. State v. Philips, 97 Mo. 331, 341, 10 S. W. 855, 3 L. R. A. 476.

[a] It is a power to be used only when there is no other remedy under our judicial system that will meet the situation and prevent irreparable mischief, and when that mischief springs from something other than mere error of judgment. State v. Johnson, 105 Wis. 164, 83 N. W. 320.

[b] If the party has a remedy by appeal or by application for remedial writs, the court will not exercise its supervisory jurisdiction. Heintz v. Hold, 132 La. 859, 61 So. 850.

[a] The power is to be wisely used for the benefit of any citizen when an inferior court either refuses to act within its jurisdiction or acts beyond extends to judicial, as well as jurisdictional⁹⁷ errors, and to civil,⁹⁸ as well as criminal⁹⁹ cases.

The power refers primarily and exclusively to courts,¹ not to the litigants, parties,² or officers of courts,³ although in some states the power is extended so as to cover all commissions and boards created by law,⁴ and over clerks in the exercise of certain duties.⁵

3. Method of Exercising Power.—The constitutions granting supervisory jurisdiction to the courts of last resort are generally silent as to the means and instrumentalities to be used in exercising the power of superintending control.⁶ By the grant of power, the court is en-its jurisdiction to the serious prejudice of the citizen. State v. Johnson, 103 Wis. 591, 79 N. W. 1081, 51 L. R. A. 33. To same effect, see Ex parte Batesville & B. R. Co., 39 Ark. 82; State ex rel. McGovern v. Williams, 136 Wis. 1, 116 N. W. 225, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 941.

[b] One function of the control is to enable the supreme court to control the course of litigation in the inferior courts, where, although proceeding within their jurisdiction, they, by a mistake of law or wilful disregard of it, are doing a gross injustice and there is no remedy by appeal or it is inadequate. State v. District Court, 24 Mont. 539, 563, 63 Pac. 395.

dowed with all the common law writs applicable to the jurisdiction,⁷ and therefore the court may in the exercise of this power issue the writs of mandamus, prohibition, certiorari and procedendo when appropriate.⁸ If the common law writs are not sufficiently broad or effective to accomplish the results necessary, the courts may enlarge the writ,⁹ or devise new writs¹⁰ to meet the needs of the particular case. Inferior courts may be superintended and controlled by appeal and writs of error also.¹¹

E. TO ISSUE PREROGATIVE AND REMEDIAL WRITS.—1. In the Exercise of Original Jurisdiction.—a. In General.—Power is often conferred upon courts of last resort in the exercise of its original jurisdiction to issue writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, quo warranto, certiorari, injunction and other remedial writs with authority to hear and determine the same,¹² which power can be exercised although the court

[a] To warrant the assertion of original jurisdiction, "the interest of the state should be primary and proximate, not indirect or remote; peculiar perhaps to some subdivision of the state, but affecting the state at large in some of its prerogatives; raising a contingency requiring the interposition of this [supreme] court to preserve the prerogatives and franchises of the state in its sovereign character; this court judging of the contingency, in each case, for itself. For all else, though raising questions publici juris, ordinary remedies and ordinary jurisdictions are adequate. And only when, for some peculiar cause these are inadequate, will the original jurisdiction of this court be exercised for protection of merely private or merely local rights." Attorney General v. is no other adequate remedy and the exercise of such jurisdiction is necessary to prevent a failure of justice. In such case the court will issue its original process, although the sovereign power, prerogatives or franchises of the state are only indirectly drawn in question.²⁹ If, however, there is a necessary public interest, the court will not refuse jurisdiction because there might be a private relator possessing a private interest.³⁰ In such a case the court in administering relief will not ignore the private interest, but will grant full relief.³¹ And despite the dropping out and disappearance of the private interest, the court will proceed and vindicate the public right if separable.³²

34. In re Petition of Anderson, 164 Wis. 1, 159 N. W. 559.

[a] An action to determine whose name should, after a primary election, be certified by the secretary of state as the nominee of a party for a state office—in this case that of a member for assembly—is within the original jurisdiction of the supreme court; but other courts having the same original jurisdiction, when to do so would crowd the docket and interfere with the court's appellate duties.³⁵

What Are Questions of Public Interest.—It is difficult if not unwise to attempt to mark out or define what particular questions affect the sovereignty of the states, its franchises or prerogatives, or the liberties of the people.³⁶

2. In the Exercise of Other Jurisdictions.—In so far as they are appropriate, these writs may be used as aids in the exercise of the other powers of the court,³⁷ whether such powers are appellate³⁸ or merely in view of the statutory provisions for a recount of the votes, and because there would be an issue of fact which must be sent to the circuit court for trial, with no reasonable certainty that any result could be reached before the time when the secretary of state must act, leave to bring such an action is in this case denied. In re Petition of Anderson, 164 Wis. 1, 159 N. W. 559.

[a] Illustrations.—Original jurisdiction may be "invoked when there is a showing made either that (1) a citizen is wrongfully deprived of his liberty; (2) a state office has been usurped; (3) a franchise grantable only by the state has been usurped, abused or forfeited; (4) a law regulating public-service corporations in the interest of the people is systematically disobeyed and set at naught; (5) a navigable river, . . . is obstructed or encroached upon, or a public railroad built under a charter granted by the state is about to be destroyed; (6) a state officer declines to perform a ministerial duty, in the performance of which the people at large have a material interest; (7) a state officer is about to perform an official act materially affecting the interests of the people at large, which is contrary to law or imposed upon him by the terms of a law which violates constitutional provisions; or (8) the situation is such, in a matter publici juris, that the remedy in the lower courts is entirely lacking or absolutely inadequate." But a case, although involving a question publici juris, will not come within the jurisdiction if it be only local in its effect, subject only to the exception named in the eighth class. Nor will a case involving a mere private interest or one whose private purpose is to redress a private wrong be entertained. State ex rel. Bolens v. Frear, 148 Wis. 456, 498, 134 N. W. 673, 135 N. W. 164, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1147, L. R. A. 1915B, 569. And see cases cited supra, this section.

[b] The supreme court, though without original jurisdiction of suits for injunctions, may, in an original action in quo warranto to determine the right of rival boards to exercise official functions, grant an ancillary injunction to protect those having the prima facie right from interference by other claimants during the pendency of such original action. of constitutional provisions relating to the exercise of the governor's executive duties,⁴³ or to giving an opinion on important questions of law involved in the exercise of the governor's executive powers and on solemn occasions.⁴⁴ By the provision of some constitutions the supreme court occupies much the same position as the attorney general, and is required to give its opinion upon important questions upon solemn occasions, when required by either of the legislative branches or by the governor or by the governor and council.⁴⁵

In giving their opinion the justices do not act as a court.⁴⁸ Their opinion is not a decision or adjudication of the question,⁴⁹ but is merely an advisory opinion which is not binding on the court or any one,⁵⁰ although accorded weight by the public and profession as indicating what the law is.⁵¹

G. OF QUESTION OR CASE CERTIFIED.⁵²—The certification of a question to an appellate court does not invoke any original jurisdiction in such court;⁵³ the case comes within its appellate jurisdiction,⁵⁴ or at least within its superintending control over inferior courts.⁵⁵

H. TERRITORIAL LIMITATION.—The territorial jurisdiction of the supreme court is generally co-extensive with the state,⁵⁶ whereas the jurisdiction of the intermediate appellate courts is generally limited to some defined district within the state.⁵⁷

[a] The test as to whether title to realty is directly involved so as to deprive a court of jurisdiction is whether the issues to be litigated demand a judgment affecting title. Ill. Pankey v. Modglin, 116 Ill. App. 6. N. Y.—Hogg v. Mack, 53 Hun 463, 6

b. In Criminal Cases.—(1.) Generally.—The jurisdiction of inferior courts such as justices, police and recorder's courts is governed entirely by the constitutional and statutory provisions of each state,⁶⁵

N. Y. Supp. 301, 17 Civ. Proc. 338, 25 N. Y. St. 374. Pa.—Hlenwood v. Cheeseman, 3 Serg. & R. 500.

See the title "Justices of the Peace."

[b] As effective a practical test as can be found is supplied by the answer to the question: Is the effect of the judgment appealed from such as to divest one of the parties of the title or to invest one of them with the title? It is manifest that if the issues and judgment are of such a character as to settle the question of title and enable the parties to make use of the judgment as the basis of a plea of res adjudicata, in a controversy concerning the title, jurisdiction is in this court, but it is equally evident that, where the judgment cannot be regarded as conclusively adjudicating the question of title, jurisdiction is in the appellate court, although the question of title may be incidentally or indirectly involved. Youngson v. Bond, 69 Neb. 256, 95 N. W. 700.

[c] The mere fact that in trying title to land within the jurisdiction of the court it may be necessary for the court to incidentally try title to land in another county does not divest the court of jurisdiction as to the land within the jurisdiction of the court. Carkeek v. Boston Nat. Bank, 16 Wash. 399, 47 Pac. 884.

[d] Illustrations.—The following have been held not to be cases involving title to lands: (1) Suit to charge land held in trust with liability for services and property furnished for its use (*Beckwith v. E. 455); (4) suit upon notes given for land where defense was failure of consideration because of bad title. Black v. Fritz, 98 Ga. 32, 25 S. E. 188.

[e] In a prosecution for obstructing a street if it appears there is a bona fide contention either as to the existence of the highway or the title to the lands where the alleged obstructions are located, the whole proceeding should be dismissed. People v. Wolverine Mfg. Co., 141 Mich. 455, 104 N. W. 725, 113 Am. St. Rep. 544; Roberts v. Highway Comrs., 25 Mich. 23.

[a] The fact that a statute provides a fine in excess of the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace for maintaining a nuisance, but provides that it shall not be imposed except where no other punishment is specially provided, does not deprive a justices court from taking jurisdiction of an offense coming within the designation of a nuisishment to be imposed,⁷⁴ even though the court assesses the fine at a sum within its jurisdiction.⁷⁵ Where a more severe punishment is prescribed for second and third offenses such courts may lose jurisdiction.⁷⁶ Such a court has no jurisdiction over an offense punishable by both fine and imprisonment where the statute gives it jurisdiction only over offenses punishable by fine and imprisonment,⁷⁷ even though in the particular case a fine only is imposed.⁷⁸ The fact however that as incidental to the punishment the defendant is required to pay the costs of prosecution,⁷⁹ and give a bond for good behavior for a specified time,⁸⁰ or is precluded from holding any license,⁸¹ or privilege,⁸² does not deprive the court of jurisdiction.

(IV.) Repeal of Statute Conferring Jurisdiction.—Upon the repeal of a statute creating a specified inferior court and giving it exclusive jurisdiction of a certain offense or offenses, jurisdiction vests in such courts as the general law of the state provides,⁸³ without any express provision to that effect.⁸⁴

ance, but for which a special penalty is provided. State v. Meek, 112 Iowa 338, 84 N. W. 3, 84 Am. St. Rep. 342, 51 L. R. A. 414.

Compare People ex rel. Cosgriff v. Craig, 60 Misc. 529, 112 N. Y. Supp. 781, holding that though punishable by double the length of imprisonment in a county penitentiary, the offense was not a felony and the police court still had jurisdiction.

[a] Reason.—There are several reasons for saying that the costs of prosecution in criminal causes are but a mere incident, and no part of the fine proper contemplated by the framers of the constitution. A cogent ground for such ruling is that the right of a justice to proceed in civil actions, where costs always accrue to the successful party, or in criminal cases, where by statute costs follow a conviction, must be capable of determination at the outset of the proceeding, and not at its termination, which would invariably be the result if the jurisdiction could be permitted to depend upon the amount of costs which might accumulate during trial. *State v. municipal courts,⁸⁷ in most states is restricted to the trial of crimes committed within the city or county where the court is located and is not extended by a statute conferring the jurisdiction of justices of the peace upon a municipal court within the corporate limits.⁸⁸ Nor is the jurisdiction of a justice court without the limits of a city affected by a statute conferring upon a municipal court exclusive jurisdiction over offenses committed within the city, unless the intention to do so is very clear.⁸⁹

(VI.) Loss or Divestiture of Jurisdiction.⁹⁰ — In so far as the jurisdiction of municipal and justices courts are dependent upon the statutes of a state, the legislature may change such jurisdiction,⁹¹ but the conferring of jurisdiction over certain offenses upon a municipal court does not oust a justices⁹² or other court⁹³ of jurisdiction, in the ab-

3. Amount in Controversy.—This matter is fully treated elsewhere.⁹⁵

IX. SCOPE, EXTENT AND EXERCISE OF JURISDICTION.

A. IN GENERAL.—Courts established by written law cannot transcend the jurisdiction given by the law of their creation.⁹⁶ The power of the court to apply the remedy in the case is co-extensive with its jurisdiction over the subject matter.⁹⁷ Courts are invested with certain inherent powers which form an acknowledged part of their jurisdiction,⁹⁸ so that thus even in the absence of statute authorizing it, the court may punish contempts,⁹⁹ and administer oaths in the trial of cases,¹ though they have no inherent jurisdiction.² When the parties are once properly before the court, jurisdiction continues without further notice as long as any steps can be rightfully taken in any cause,³ and is not

[b] A state court may render a judgment in favor of a marshal for the return of the property in a replevin suit against him for property seized under attachment, where the property was taken from the marshal. Feusier v. Lammon, 6 Nev. 209.

[c] No Statutory Remedy Provided. Where a power is conferred upon a court of general jurisdiction, and no special mode for that determination is pointed out, the jurisdiction conferred necessarily implies authority in such court to call to its assistance in determining the particular question, the same aid as is usually employed by it in reaching a judicial determination in other cases. *People v. exhausted by the rendition of its judgment,⁴ but continues until that judgment shall be satisfied.⁵

B. ANCILLARY JURISDICTION.—Statutes sometimes give a court cognizance of all incidental matters arising out of a transaction so that the court may finally adjudicate upon the rights of the parties to the controversy.⁶ But even without such a provision, a statute expressly conferring a certain jurisdiction on a court by necessary implication also confers all power necessary to carry such jurisdiction into effect,⁷ and therefore upon rendition of a judgment the court may subsequently direct such process or make such orders as may be necessary to carry its judgment into effect,⁸ and prevent abuse of its process,⁹ and by virtue of its general superintending power over its process has control over the parties and the subject-matter, and it had the power, and it was its duty to hear and decide every question of fact and law that arose in the progress of the case, until it was finally disposed of." *Phelps v. C. JURISDICTION TO DETERMINE ENTIRE CONTROVERSY. — When the court before which the controversy is pending has acquired jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties to the suit, who are all before it, the jurisdiction extends to all matters between the parties that relate to the subject matter of the suit and that may affect the parties,¹²

the court of the power granted.¹⁵ And where the existence of certain facts is necessary to give a court jurisdiction, such facts must exist at or before the time the jurisdiction is assumed or exercised.¹⁶ The exercise of the jurisdiction may be suspended but the jurisdiction itself is never suspended.¹⁷ However, the court may lose jurisdiction where it departs from the established mode of procedure governing the class of cases to which the case in question belongs.¹⁸

It is the duty of the court, under proper circumstances, to exercise its jurisdiction,¹⁹ and it may be compelled by mandamus to do so.²⁰

X. TERRITORIAL LIMITS OF JURISDICTION.—A. IN GENERAL.—The general jurisdiction of the courts of a state is co-extensive with its sovereignty, which is limited only by the territory of the state²¹ and is exclusive,²² subject to constitutional limitations,²³ as to all the property and persons within the limits thereof.²⁴ The legislature cannot

[b] Over Soldiers' Home.—The jurisdiction of state courts over inmates of a home for disabled soldiers of the federal government is not affected by the fact that such persons are subject to the rules and articles of war the same as if they were in the army, or by the fact that he has been punished under the rules of the home. In re O'Connor, 37 Wis. 379, 19 Am. Rep. 765.

[c] Military Offenses.—Civil courts have concurrent jurisdiction with courts martial over all offenses committed by military officers. Franklin v. United States, 216 U. S. 559, 30 Sup. Ct. 434, 54 L. ed. 615. See the title "Courts Martial."

[a] The jurisdiction of courts is part and parcel of the power inherent in the state by virtue of its sovereignty. The jurisdiction of the state within its own territory is necessarily exclusive and absolute. It is therefore susceptible of no limitation not imposed by itself, for any restriction upon it deriving validity from an external source would imply a diminution of its sovereignty to the extent of the restriction, and an investment of that sovereignty to the same extent in some other power. *Watts, Watts & Co. v. abdicate the jurisdiction of the state over its territory:²⁵ except where lands are purchased with the consent of the state for the purpose designated in the constitution of the United States.²⁶ Certain other exceptions have grown up, as when sovereigns,²⁷ or public ministers of foreign states,²⁸ or where troops of a foreign country²⁹ are present or permitted to pass through the state.

B. OVER PROPERTY PURCHASED BY UNITED STATES.—There is an apparent exception to the exclusive control of the courts of a state over all the property within the state in the case of United States property. Where lands within a state are purchased by the United States government for the purposes specified in the constitution of the United States and congress has vested exclusive jurisdiction over such territory in the United States government the United States courts have exclusive control thereof.³⁰ Under such provision land purchased by the United States within a state with the consent of such state for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards and other needful buildings are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.³¹ This provision has no application to the territories, being applicable only to states,³² nor has it any application to purchases or occupancy by the United States where the state has not consented to such purchase or occupancy.³³ The reservation contained in such grants, to the effect

In General. — From the fact that each state has exclusive control over all persons and property within its boundaries it necessarily follows that no state can exercise direct jurisdiction and authority over persons or property without its territory.³⁵ It is a principle universally recognized that laws have no extraterritorial force,³⁶ except so far

[a] It matters not whether it be a kingdom, a state, a county, or a city, or other local district. If it be the former, it is necessarily bounded and limited by the sovereignty of the government itself, which cannot be extraterritorial; if the latter, then the judicial interpretation is that the sovereign has chosen to assign this special limit short of his general authority. *Galpin v. [a] Reason.—There are obvious difficulties that would be encountered if the courts of one state undertook to adjust the internal affairs of a foreign corporation formed under the laws of a different state and having its habitat within the borders of another sovereignty. The absence of a visitatorial power over such a corporation and the absolute inability to enforce a forfeiture of its charter for a violation of the law, or to remove its officers for misconduct, or to punish them for malversations committed in the place of its domicile, are open and apparent obstacles in the court's pathway, should it assume to exert an extraterritorial jurisdiction. Besides all this, its lack of the means to do full justice, and its want of the machinery to enforce against the corporation in the place of its existence, any decree it might render in such a proceeding indicate, if they do not demonstrate that the legislature never designed to confer a power, the existence of which would or might be utterly fruitless and vain. Condon v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Assn., 89 Md. 99, 42 Atl. 944, 73 Am. St. Rep. 169, 44 L. R. A. 149.

[b] A statute providing that every foreign insurance company doing business in this state shall appoint an agent upon whom process can be served, does not confer upon the courts of this state jurisdiction to regulate the internal government of such corporation. Condon v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Assn., 89 Md. 99, 42 Atl. 944, 73 Am. St. Rep. 169, 44 L. R. A. 149.

[a] The unerring test by which it may be determined, whether a particular cause of action sounding in damages is local or transitory—"inheres in the nature of the subject of the injury as differing from the means whereby and the mere place at which the injury was inflicted. If the subject of the injury be real estate or an easement, . . . obviously the action must be local, for the reason that the injury to the particular real estate or easement could not possibly have arisen anywhere else than where the thing injured was actually situated. But if the subject of the injury be an individual, then an injury to that individual's person, no matter by what means occasioned or where afflicted, is essentially an injury to a subject not having a fixed, . . . immovable location; and an action to recover damages therefor would necessarily be transitory." *Potomac Milling & Ice Co. v. [a] The development of the rule is traced in Christensen v. Floriston Pulp & Paper Co., 29 Nev. 552, 92 Pac. 210, the court concluding that: "The right to bring such an action in a foreign jurisdiction does not rest, as some of the decisions seem to put it, upon principles of comity, but rather because 'the action by which the remedy is to be enforced is a personal, and not a real action, and is of that character which the law recognizes as transitory and not local.'" See also Armbruster v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 166 Iowa 155, 147 N. W. 337.

[b] The right to enforce an action in a federal court in one state in a cause of action arising under the laws of another state, depends entirely upon the statutes and the policy of such other state. St. Bernard v. Shane, 201 Fed. 453.

[c] A foreign corporation having filed its articles of incorporation and complied with the law of the forum is in no better position to demand the exercise of jurisdiction than any other party. Olympia Min. & Mill. Co. v. Kerns, 64 Wash. 545, 117 Pac. 260.

to him.⁶⁵ Each sovereignty has the right to finally determine for itself; not only the nature and extent of the duty to exercise jurisdiction but the occasions on which its exercise may be justly demanded,⁶⁶ subject only to the constitutional requirement that citizens of a sister state be not discriminated against.⁶⁷ The court accordingly, pursuant to the policy of the sovereignty, may dismiss an action⁶⁸ if for any reason

[d] It cannot be said that a citizen is not to be governed and bound by the laws of his own country; nor can he, in disregard of such laws, go into the courts of another country and ask them, as a matter of comity, to redress wrongs which the laws of his own domicile require him to seek redress for in the courts of his own country. The very principle upon which comity between foreign or sister states is based repels the idea that he has even the shadow of a claim to any such right. Southern Pac. Co. v. Dusablon, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 203, 210, 106 S. W. 766.

[e] The doctrine of comity owes its origin and authority to the voluntary adoption and consent of nations. Crippen v. Loughton, 69 N. H. 540, 44 Atl. 538, 76 Am. St. Rep. 192, 46 L. R. A. 467.

ditions they may be enforced. St. Bernard v. Shane, 201 Fed. 453.

[a] Privilege and Immunity Guaranteed by Constitution of United States.—One of the "privileges and immunities" referred to in the constitutional provision is the right to bring and maintain an action in the courts of the state. Any citizen of this state may bring an action in the court of one state upon a transitory cause of action arising in another state, and against a citizen of another state, provided he can obtain jurisdiction of the person of the defendant in this state. This is one of the rights guaranteed him under our constitution and laws. If the words "privileges and immunities" in the constitutional clause in question refer to the right to maintain actions, then a resident of another state has the same right to bring an action in the courts of this state upon a cause of action arising in another state, and against a citizen of another state, that a citizen of this state has, because the constitution guarantees him the same right as a citizen of this state. *Eingartner v. it seems improper to take jurisdiction, or if it refers to property situated in the other state.⁶⁹

It has been held that the court will, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, decline jurisdiction of actions between foreigners or non-residents founded upon personal injuries or purely personal wrongs, committed in another jurisdiction unless special circumstances are shown to exist which require the retention of jurisdiction,⁷⁰ but this rule has not been applied in cases of a contractual nature,⁷¹ but according to some authorities, neither the crowded condition of the calendar of the court,⁷² nor the length of time required for the trial of a cause⁷³ nor the expense entailed upon the county,⁷⁴ are valid reasons for refusing to entertain such a case.

c. Exceptions and Limitations to Rule.—To the rule under discussion there are some exceptions in which actions must be brought within the country where they arose.⁷⁵ These exceptions exist where the foreign law governing the case is in direct contravention of the law and policy of the forum,⁷⁶ where the remedy prescribed by the lex loci delicti is plation that such liquors should thereafter be sold in violation of the laws of the forum. Smith v. Godfrey, 28 N. H. 379, 61 Am. Dec. 617. (3) Nor will they enforce a contract made in a foreign state by a citizen of the state of the forum, even though the contract be valid in the foreign state if, under the laws of the state of the forum, her citizens had not legal capacity to enter into such a contract. Armstrong v. Best, 112 N. C. 59, 17 S. E. 14, 34 Am. St. Rep. 473, 25 L. R. A. 188; Knittle v. Ellenbusch (S. D.), 159 N. W. 893.

[b] A statute imposing upon the wife a liability for purchases made by her husband without her knowledge, on proof that they constituted a part of "the expenses of the family," is founded on the power of a state to regulate the duty of supporting the families of its citizens. For that reason it may be doubted whether it was intended to apply to citizens of other states "temporarily" within that state. If it was intended to apply to such citizens, it is not a liability which will be enforced by the courts of other states. Mandell Bros. v. Fogg, 182 Mass. 582, 66 N. E. 198, 94 Am. St. Rep. 667, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 426.

[a] Where the cause of action arose abroad, where it affected only the internal government of a foreign corporation, and where the judgment, if rendered, could not be in any way enforced against the corporation, except by injunction against individual members of it, and the party had an ample remedy in the state where the corporation had a legal existence, the courts of a state other than the domicile of the corporation might well decline to exercise an equitable jurisdiction. *Gregory v. [b] In Texas it would seem advisable not to prove the laws of Mexico

fact that the remedy, available in the forum may not be as full or complete as the foreign law would afford will not alone justify the court in refusing to entertain jurisdiction.⁸⁷

3. As to Real Property Beyond State.—a. In General.—The law is well settled that the jurisdiction of the courts of a state does not extend to real property situated beyond its territorial limits.⁸⁸ Accordingly the courts of one state cannot entertain suits relating to title or possession of realty situated without the state,⁸⁹ and therefore, they

[a] Action for slander of title to real property is transitory and may be brought in a state other than where the property is situated. Dodge v. Colby, 108 N. Y. 445, 15 N. E. 703.

[b] Waiver of Objection.—If the court, however, acquires jurisdiction in an action for injuries to real property over the persons of the parties by due personal service of process, or by their voluntary appearance and submission to its jurisdiction and the defendant

trespass to real property to be transitory merely.⁹⁸ But if timber, sand and the like have been severed from the realty, the owner of the land may waive all claim for damages to the freehold and maintain a personal action for the value of the property removed, wherever he can obtain jurisdiction over the defendant's person,⁹⁹ notwithstanding he may be compelled to allege and prove ownership of the premises.¹ If the gravamen of the action is trespass to the land, however, this qualification of the rule does not apply.² But if the injury to the real estate results from a cause or act arising or occurring in a county or state other than the one in which it is situated, the action may be brought in either jurisdiction.³

Actions based upon contracts, however, respecting realty situated in another state than the forum are transitory and not local⁴ so that actions for rent,⁵ for waste,⁶ for an accounting as to the rents and profits of realty,⁷ for breach of covenant, when brought by the original convenantee⁸ need not be brought in the state where the land lies.

Liens.—Under the statutes of most states actions to enforce liens upon real property are local and are restricted to the courts of the county or city wherein the land is situated.⁹

b. Exceptions and Limitations to Rule.—The territorial limitation of the jurisdiction of courts of a state over property in another estate has a limited and well-defined exception in courts of equity, which, having jurisdiction over the person, may indirectly act upon real estate in another state through the instrumentality of this authority over the person.¹⁰ In such case the power exists to compel the defendant to do all things necessary, which he could do voluntarily, to give full effect to

It is a jurisdiction which arises when a special equity can be shown which forms a ground for compelling a party to convey or release, or for restraining him from asserting a title or right in lands so situated, and is strictly limited to those cases in which the relief decreed

[a] In Bullock v. Bullock, 52 N. J. Eq. 561, 30 Atl. 676, 46 Am. St. Rep. 528; the complainant's husband had been adjudged by the supreme court of the state of New York, in a divorce proceeding of which it had jurisdiction, to execute a mortgage upon lands in New Jersey to secure the payment of a certain sum per month to the complainant as alimony. He refused to do so, and made other mortgages and conveyances of the lands, which the wife alleged were fraudulently made for the purpose of defeating her rights. She charged that she had acquired an equitable lien in the lands by virtue of the New York decree, and prayed the court to set aside the several mortgages and conveyances, and that he be decreed to execute and deliver the mortgage required by the New York court. The majority of the court held that, while the New York court might have enforced the execution of the mortgage by the defendant while he was within its jurisdiction, this not having been done, the New York decree could not operate as a cause of action affecting the title to land in New Jersey, and pointed out that "the doctrine that jurisdiction respecting lands in a foreign state is not in rem but only in personam is bereft of all practical force if the decree in personam is conclusive and must be enforced by the courts of the situs." *Fall v. full faith and credit will be given to such decrees and judgments, by according to them a force merely personal upon the parties and enforceable alone by their process.¹⁷

Such actions are limited almost or quite exclusively to those equitable actions wherein the relief sought can be effectually enforced through a degree in personam, being cases based upon fraud, trust, or upon some privity of contract or estate.¹⁸ Some courts will refuse jurisdiction if both parties are non-residents of the forum, unless the action is based upon a contract entered into by such parties within such state.¹⁹ And equity will not grant relief to compel an act of doubtful legality affecting lands in another jurisdiction.²⁰

c. On the Seas and Navigable Waters. — (I.) Within Three Mile Limit. Though it has been said that as between nations the minimum limit of the territorial jurisdiction of a nation over tidewaters is a marine league, or three geographical miles from its coast, measured from low water mark;³⁵ other authorities hold that the courts of a nation or state have no jurisdiction over an offense committed within the three mile limit unless statute expressly so provides.³⁶ State statutes providing for the exercise of jurisdiction over all offenses committed within the three mile limit, are constitutional.³⁷

(II.) Offenses on High Seas. — Except in the case of piracy,³⁸ in the absence of statute, federal courts have no jurisdiction of an offense committed on the high seas,³⁹ unless committed upon an American vessel,⁴⁰ and if it does take place upon the high seas upon such a vessel, United States courts have exclusive jurisdiction.⁴¹

d. Offenses on Vessels. — Vessels are a part of the territory of the country to which they belong, and hence offences committed upon vessels belonging to the United States or any of its citizens, within the admiralty jurisdiction, though out of the territorial limits of the United States are cognizable by its courts,⁴² notwithstanding the offense was

this control remains with the state.⁴⁹ The federal courts have merely assumed jurisdiction over offenses committed upon one of these bodies of water where such water is out of the jurisdiction of any state.⁵⁰ Bays wholly within the territory of a nation, the headlands of which are not more than six geographical miles apart, have always been regarded as a part of the territory of such state or nation.⁵¹

f. On Boundary Rivers.—Where a navigable stream is the boundary between two states and neither state was the original proprietor, the jurisdiction of a state over offenses committed upon such stream is determined by whether the offense was committed beyond the center of such navigable channel as distinguished from the center of the river from bank to bank;⁵² that is, where neither state was the original proprietor, then the territory of each runs to the middle line of the main channel, in the absence of a contrary agreement.⁵³ When, however, one state is the original proprietor and grants the territory on one side only, it retains jurisdiction over the whole river.⁵⁴ By reason of treaties and statutory provisions, in some states the jurisdiction of the particular states extends to the middle of the river,⁵⁵ while in others exclusive jurisdiction is given to one state over the whole river,⁵⁶ or the states have concurrent jurisdiction.⁵⁷

[b] The weight of modern authority seems to support the proposition that a foreign corporation may be sued on a transitory cause of action in any jurisdiction where it can be found in the sense that service may be perfected upon an agent or officer transacting business for the corporation within that jurisdiction, and that the residence of the plaintiff and the place at which the cause of action arose are not material questions to be determined to maintain jurisdiction if the corporation can be found and served. *Reeves v. [a] Character of Proceeding.—A proceeding to enforce the payment of a debt or demand, by attachment against the defendant's personal property within the jurisdiction of the court partakes in its nature and character of a proceeding in rem and also of an action in personam. If the defendant is served within the jurisdiction, or appears generally, the proceeding is in the nature of a personal action. He is liable in such case to a personal judgment, if the indebtedness is established, irrespective of the property seized, with the added incident that the property attached remains liable under the control of the court to answer to the demand established against the defendant by the final judgment of the court. If there be no such service or appearance of the defendant, then the proceeding is in its nature in rem, or, more accurately speaking, quasi in rem, the only effect of which is to subject the property attached to the payment of the demand which the court may find to be due to the plaintiff. Griffin Co. v. Howell, 38 Utah 357, 113 Pac. 326. To same effect, Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 308, 318, 19 L. ed. 931.

[b] The judgment of the court, though in form a personal judgment against the defendant, has no effect beyond the property attached in that suit. No general execution can be issued for any balance unpaid after the attached property is exhausted. No suit can be maintained on such a judgment in the same court or in any other, nor can it be used as evidence in any other proceeding not affecting the attached property; nor could the costs in that proceeding be collected of defendant out of any other property than that attached in the suit. Second, the court, in such a suit, cannot proceed unless the officer finds some property of defendant on which to levy the writ of attachment. A return, that none can be found, is the end of the case, and deprives the court of further jurisdiction, though the publication may have been duly made and proven in court. But if there is no appearance of the defendant, and no service of process on him, the case becomes, in its essential nature, a proceeding in rem, the only effect of which is to subject the property attached to the payment of the demand which the court may find to be due to the plaintiff. Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 308, 318, 19 L. ed. 931. And see generally the titles "Judgments;" "Judgments and Decrees, Enforcement of."

process of attachment,⁸⁰ by virtue of the fact that each state has exclusive control and jurisdiction over the property situated within its territorial limits,⁸¹ the power of the court to render judgment being restricted to rendering a judgment affecting the property before the court only.⁸² It is for these reasons that the statutes providing for service by publication are passed.⁸³ The right to exercise jurisdiction with reference to the property of a nonresident depends upon whether it has been subjected to the control of the court by some appropriate method.⁸⁴

4. All Parties Nonresident.— Unless a statute provides otherwise, neither alienage⁸⁵ nor nonresidence⁸⁶ of all the parties deprives the court of jurisdiction of a cause of action, whether the cause arose

[a] Where nonresidents have property within the state, it is material whether the property is in the first instance brought under the control of the court by attachment or some other equivalent act, and afterwards applied by its judgment to the satisfaction of demands against its owner; the jurisdiction of the court to inquire into and determine his obligations at all is only incidental to its jurisdiction over the property. Its jurisdiction in that respect cannot be made to depend upon facts to be ascertained after it has tried the cause and rendered the judgment. If the judgment be previously void, it will not become valid by the subsequent discovery of property of the defendant, or by his subsequent acquisition of it. The judgment, if void when rendered, will always remain void; it cannot occupy the doubtful position of being valid if property be found, and void if there be none. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. XI. CONFLICTING AND CONCURRENT JURISDICTION.

A. CONCURRENT AND EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION.—1. In General. Jurisdiction may be either concurrent or exclusive.⁹⁰ When the constitution, in express terms, confers jurisdiction over a particular subject-matter upon one court, and not upon another, it must be presumed that it was intended the jurisdiction conferred should be exclusive,⁹¹ unless in the clause conferring it or elsewhere in the constitution the same jurisdiction, or jurisdiction of the same character, is conferred also on another court.⁹² And if the constitution gives a court general jurisdiction of certain cases with certain exceptions, a statute conferring upon a court jurisdiction of a case not within the named exceptions creates a general jurisdiction.⁹³

2. Where Jurisdiction of Law and Equity Is Concurrent.—Courts of law and courts of equity have in some cases concurrent jurisdiction.⁹⁴ In such case the court first taking jurisdiction will retain it,⁹⁵ unless there be some good reason for the interference of equity.⁹⁶

3. Statute Subsequently Conferring Jurisdiction Upon Other Court.—If a court has jurisdiction of a cause the subsequent enactment of a statute conferring concurrent jurisdiction upon other courts will not deprive the court having first obtained jurisdiction, of its control over a cause of this class.⁹⁷ Thus the original jurisdiction of a court of equity to grant relief in a certain class of cases is not divested by a statute conferring the same or a like power on a court of law. The jurisdiction of the two courts is afterwards concurrent,⁹⁸ although equity may decline to exercise jurisdiction because of the existence of the legal remedy.⁹⁹

4. Statute Creating Cause of Action Providing for Particular Forum.—When the statute creating a new right and prescribing a particular remedy for violation thereof, provides that the remedy must be pursued in a particular court, this excludes all other jurisdictions.¹

B. AS BETWEEN STATE COURTS OF THE SAME STATE. — 1. In General. — It is a principle of universal application, essential to the orderly administration of justice, in order to avoid conflict between tribunals of coequal authority,² that where suits have been instituted involving a controversy between substantially the same parties or their privies, and no actual seizure of the res has by lawful process been made by either, the one in which suit was first brought, if its power is adequate to the administration of complete justice, retains its jurisdiction notwithstanding the institution of the second suit, and it may dispose³ of

[a] A party having notes secured by a mortgage on real estate may, unless restrained by statute, sue in a court of chancery to foreclose his mortgage, and in a court of law to recover judgment on his note, and in another court of law in an action of ejectment to get possession of the land. Here in all the suits the only question at issue may be the existence of the debt mentioned in the notes and mortgage; but as the relief sought is different, and the mode of proceeding is different, the jurisdiction of neither court is affected by the proceeding in the other. And this is true, notwithstanding the common object of all the suits may be the collection of the debt. The true effect of the rule in these cases is, that the court of chancery cannot render a judgment for the debt, nor judgment of ejectment, but can only proceed in its own mode, to foreclose the equity of redemption by sale or otherwise. The first court of law cannot foreclose or give a judgment of ejectment, but can render a judgment for the payment of the debt; and the third court can give the relief by ejectment, but neither of the others. And the judgment of each court in the matter properly before it is binding and conclusive on all other courts. This is the illustration of the rule where the parties are the same in all three of the courts. Parsons Min. Co. v. McClure, 17 N. M. 694, 712, 133 Pac. 1063, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1110, 47 L. R. A. (N. [a] Effect on Judgment.—It does not follow that when the parties to a suit submit the controversy without objection to another tribunal having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, that the judgment pronounced therein by the latter court is not binding upon the parties. *Gregory v. [a] Determination of Plea.—The second suit is not, of course, to be abated and dismissed as vexatious, but all the attending circumstances are to be first carefully considered, and the true question will be, what is the aim of the plaintiff? [b] Objection Not Jurisdictional. But this is not, unless in a very remote sense, upon the ground that the court in which the first suit was brought acquired jurisdiction to the exclusion of all others, but is primarily upon the ground that a defendant should not be vexed by two such suits at the same time. [a] The relief sought in the two suits must be founded on the same or remedy.¹⁶ It extends only to such questions or propositions as arise ordinarily and properly in the progress of the suit first brought, and not to all matters which may by possibility become involved in it.¹⁷ It does not prevent other courts from adjudicating upon other matters having a very close connection with those before the first court, and, in some instances requiring the decision of the same question exactly.¹⁸

The identity of the parties, of the case made, and of the relief sought, should be such that if the first suit had been decided it could be pleaded as a bar or a former adjudication.¹⁹ The rule does not facts, and the title or essential basis of relief sought must be the same. Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 715, 20 L. ed. 666.

[b] The rule does not apply (1) where the second suit rests upon contracts or obligations which from their nature are merged in the judgment in the first suit (Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Kirchoff, 149 Ill. 536, 36 N. E. 1031), (2) or where one suit is in personam and the other in rem (Guardian Trust Co. v. Kansas City S. R. Co., 171 Fed. 43, 96 C. C. A. 285, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 620; Ahlhauser v. Butler, 50 Fed. 705); (3) nor does it apply where the first proceedings were insolvency proceedings under a state statute, as such proceedings are not a suit. Shelby v. Bacon, 10 How. (U. S.) 56, 13 L. ed. 326.

[c] Suits in Equity and at Law. The existence of an earlier suit in equity will not sustain a plea in abatement to a later action at law in another jurisdiction where the prosecution of the later action does not prevent the determination of the issues and administration of rights and remedies in the former suit. Guardian Trust Co. v. Kansas City S. R. Co., 171 Fed. 43, 96 C. C. A. 285, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 620; Ogden v. Weaver, 108 Fed. 564, 47 C. C. A. 485; Defiance Water Co. v. Defiance, 100 Fed. 178; Brooks v. Vermont Cent. R. Co., 14 Blatchf. 463, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 1,964.

[d] Federal Question.—The fact that the state court first obtained jurisdiction of the causes involving a federal question does not operate to oust the jurisdiction of the federal court of causes, subsequently brought to it, between other or the same parties, involving the decision of the same question. Rose Co. v. Southern Express Co., 223 Fed. 868.

apply where the proceedings in the first court are merely colorable and in evasion of jurisdiction.²⁰ The rule has no reference to the supremacy of one tribunal over the other,²¹ nor to the superiority in rank of the respective claims, in behalf of which the conflicting jurisdictions are invoked;²² and resting as it does upon considerations of convenience, and of decency, order and priority, it must yield to the higher principle which accords to every citizen the right to have a hearing before some court,²³ and it is therefore an essential condition of the application of the rule as to priority of jurisdiction that the first suit should afford the plaintiff in the second an adequate and complete opportunity for the adjudication of rights,²⁴ so that if the court first taking cognizance of the case possesses too limited a jurisdiction to afford all the relief to which the parties are entitled the rule is inapplicable.²⁵

3. Where Property in Custody of Another Court.—a. General Statement.—Where different plaintiffs lawfully choose different forums to enforce different rights, the question of priority of service of process so as to give jurisdiction of the person of the defendant is abstract and immaterial unless property is seized.²⁶ But when a court of competent jurisdiction has, by appropriate proceedings, taken property into its possession through its officers, the property is thereby withdrawn from the jurisdiction of all other courts.²⁷ The res in such

[a] The judicial custody of property (1) may sometimes be acquired in a somewhat less positive way. For example, it may, in some cases and as to certain parties, be accomplished by

of the appointment of a receiver,⁴³ or an adjudication of bankruptcy.⁴⁴ This principle is equally applicable to the case of personal property attached under mesne process, for the purpose of awaiting the final judgment, as in the case of the property seized in a proceeding in rem,⁴⁵ and is held to be applicable to property seized under attachment,⁴⁶ or execution,⁴⁷ though some authorities hold that the levy of an attachment on real estate,⁴⁸ or the commencement of a suit to foreclose a mechanic's or materialman's lien on property⁴⁹ will not give the court from which such process issues such actual or constructive possession of the property as to preclude another court from assuming jurisdiction over the property.

Where Proceedings Are Invalid.—Of course if the first court had no jurisdiction of the cause of which it assumed control,⁵⁰ or the appointment of the receiver was void,⁵¹ the possession of the res by the first court does not preclude the second court from acquiring jurisdiction of the res, though there is authority to the effect that no inquiry will be made in the other court as to the jurisdiction of the court in which lis pendens (Miller v. Sherry, 2 Wall. [U. S.] 237, 17 L. ed. 827), (2) or, as against parties to the suit, there may be an equitable levy by virtue of the suit itself, where equitable assets are sought to be subjected by means of a creditors' bill (Freedman's Sav. & Tr. the suit is pending, that being a matter to be raised there by any interested party asserting it.⁵² Nor will the court allow an interfering claimant to question the validity of the orders under which possession was obtained on the ground that they were improvidently made.⁵³

When the litigation is ended, or the possession discharged, other courts can then deal with it.⁵⁴ The rendition of a judgment in the first cause does not exhaust the jurisdiction of the first court,⁵⁵ but it continues until the judgment is satisfied.⁵⁶

Interference by Leave of Court of Seizure. — The rule prohibits interference by the second court with the possession of the property or res except by permission of the first court.⁵⁷

c. What Determines Priority. — The question as to which authority should for the time prevail, does not depend upon the rights of the respective parties to the property seized, but upon the question, which jurisdiction had first attached by the seizure and custody of the property.⁵⁸ This rule applies not only to cases where property has been actually seized before the institution of a second suit in another court, but also where, in the progress of the litigation, the court acquiring jurisdiction may be compelled to assume the possession and

C. AS BETWEEN STATE AND FEDERAL COURTS. — 1. In General. The constitution of the United States merely extends the judicial power of the United States to specified cases and controversies, leaving it to congress to determine whether the courts to be established by it from time to time shall be given exclusive cognizance of such cases or controversies, or shall only exercise jurisdiction concurrent with those of the several states.⁶⁸

Since the jurisdiction of the state courts is not to be defeated by implication,⁶⁹ the mere grant by congress of jurisdiction to a federal court does not render such jurisdiction exclusive,⁷⁰ the courts of the states having concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of the United States in all cases wherein the jurisdiction of the latter is not made exclusive, either by direct legislation, or by necessary implication, or by such incompatibility with the existence of state authority that it could not be supposed the state courts should undertake the matter,⁷¹

provided the state court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter under the state law.⁷²

There are only two classes of cases in which the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States may justly be regarded as exclusive.⁷³ The first, where the jurisdiction is made exclusive by the express terms, or by the necessary construction of the provisions of the federal constitution.⁷⁴ The second, when an act of congress confers a jurisdiction, that before its passage could not have been exercised at all—that is, when the act not merely confers, but creates the jurisdiction.⁷⁵ The mere fact that an act of congress gives its courts jurisdiction does not impair or affect the original jurisdiction of the state courts.⁷⁶ Thus, a legal or equitable right acquired under the state laws, may be prosecuted in the state courts, and also, if the parties reside in different states, in the federal courts.⁷⁷ So rights, whether legal or equitable, acquired under the laws of the United States, may be prosecuted in the United States courts, or in the state courts, competent to decide rights of the like character and class: subject, however, to this qualification, that where a right arises under a law of the United States, congress may, if it see fit, give to the federal courts

[a] This jurisdiction is sometimes exclusive by express enactment and sometimes by implication. If an act of congress gives a penalty to a party aggrieved, without specifying a remedy for its enforcement, there is no reason why it should not be enforced, if not provided otherwise by some act of congress, by a proper action in a state court. The fact that a state court derives its existence and functions from the state laws is no reason why it should not afford relief; because it is subject also to the laws of the United States, and is just as much bound to recognize these as operative within the state as it is to recognize the state laws. The two together form one system of jurisprudence which constitutes the law of the land for the state; and the courts of the two jurisdictions are not foreign to each other, nor to be treated by each other as such, but as courts of the same country, having jurisdiction partly different and partly concurrent. The disposition to regard the laws of the United States as emanating from a foreign jurisdiction is founded on erroneous views of the nature and relations of the state federal governments. Clafin v. Houseman, 93 U. S. 130, 23 L. ed. 833.

exclusive jurisdiction,⁷⁸ the concurrent jurisdiction of the state tribunals depending altogether upon the pleasure of congress,⁷⁹ which may extinguish their jurisdiction whenever it thinks proper, in every case in which the subject-matter can constitutionally be made cognizable in the federal courts.⁸⁰ In such cases the state courts do not exercise a new jurisdiction conferred upon them, but their ordinary jurisdiction derived from the state law.⁸¹

That the cause of action created by congress is a penalty to be recovered in a civil action of debt by the party grieved, constitutes no objection to the state courts taking cognizance of it, and enforcing the right,⁸² nor does the fact that a corporation is incorporated under an act of congress and it is declared to be capable of being sued in the United States courts give such courts exclusive jurisdiction.⁸³ The jurisdiction of the United States courts will be treated elsewhere.⁸⁴

2. Priority and Retention of Jurisdiction.—a. In General. Where there is a mere controversy between the parties without the possession by the court of any property taken under its control for the purposes of the suit, the pendency of a suit in a state court involving the same subject-matter, is no bar to the prosecution of a suit in a federal court,⁸⁵ although between the same parties and for the same cause of action.⁸⁶ In that event it is the duty of another court, whenever redress is sought in its forum, to take cognizance of

[a] The rule is well recognized that the pendency of an action in the state court is no bar to proceedings concerning the same matter in the federal court having jurisdiction, for both the state and federal courts have certain concurrent jurisdiction over such controversies, and when they arise between citizens of different states the federal jurisdiction may be invoked, and the cause carried to judgment, notwithstanding a state court may also have taken jurisdiction of the same case. McClellan v. Carland, 217 U. S. 268, 30 Sup. Ct. 501, 54 L. ed. 762.

[a] Not Ground for Abatement.—It

the rights of the parties,⁸⁷ although it may refrain from doing so as a matter of comity or necessity,⁸⁸ unless the federal court exercises superior jurisdiction for the purpose of enforcing the supremacy of the constitution and laws of the United States.⁸⁹ For the rule is well settled that as between federal and state courts of concurrent jurisdiction that the court first acquiring jurisdiction will retain it to the end of the controversy, and will be left to determine the controversy and to fully perform and exhaust its jurisdiction and decide every issue arising in the case without interference from and to the exclusion of the other,⁹⁰ and the proceedings in the court first acquiring jurisdiction will not be arrested by subsequent proceedings instituted in

is not per se ground for abatement. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Morris, 132 Fed. 945, 66 C. C. A. 55; People's Gas-light & Coke Co. v. City of Chicago, 192 Fed. 398.

[b] It is no ground for an abatement or stay of proceedings in the federal court where no conflict arises over the custody or dominion of the property. McClellan v. Carland, 187 Fed. 915, 921, 110 C. C. A. 49.

[c] When Res Is Identical.—The presence of and need for deciding similar questions in each court for the disposition of the causes does not make the "res" in each identical. There must be a more tangible subject-matter of the controversy, which is the same in each suit, before it can be said that the court, which first obtains jurisdiction of the matter, excludes the jurisdiction of all other co-ordinate courts from controversies relating to that subject-matter. *R. [a] The mere pendency of suits in the state courts involving the decision of the same question presented in this cause, i. e., the constitutionality of the Alabama anti-shipping law as related to the provisions of the federal constitution, affords no reason for the federal court to decline to assume jurisdiction and decide the question involved, since it is a federal question. *R. The rule is not limited in its application to cases where property has actually been seized under judicial process before the institution of a second suit, but is applicable to actions dealing actually or potentially with specific property,⁹⁴ but it has no reference to the supremacy of one tribunal over the other, nor to the superiority in rank of the respective claims in behalf of which the conflicting jurisdiction is invoked.⁹⁵

b. Determination of Priority.—There is some conflict as to when the jurisdiction attaches which secures priority.⁹⁶ Generally this depends upon when the action is commenced,⁹⁷ depending somewhat upon the law governing the procedure in the particular jurisdiction.⁹⁸ Some authorities maintain that in personal actions as distinguished from actions in rem in which the res is in the custody of the court, priority is determined by the time that the parties are served with process, and not by the date of the filing of the action,⁹⁹ especially where the law

permit any other court to interfere with such possession and jurisdiction.¹⁰ Before any interference may be had with the property in the hands of the court, application must be made to the court having such custody.¹¹ Its jurisdiction continues after the property has passed out of the possession of the court by a sale under its decree, to the extent of ascertaining the rights of, and extent of liens asserted by, parties to the suit and which are expressly reserved by the decree and subject to which the purchaser takes title; and any one asserting any of such reserved matters as against the property must pursue his remedy in that court.¹²

The rule forbidding interference is restricted to such procedure as invades the custody of the court over the property,¹³ and does not pre-

[b] The exclusive authority extends, not only to the decisions of all questions affecting its jurisdiction, and the form and force of the writ itself, and the validity of the proceeding in issuing and executing it, but also to all questions affecting the identity of the person or property seized and held under color of its authority, and the right to exempt them from its operation. Covell v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 176, 4 Sup. Ct. 355, 28 L. ed. 390.

[a] Bankruptcy.—Where property is in the possession of the bankrupt at the time of the appointment of a receiver, the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to determine the title to it as against an adverse claimant, and the receiver has no right to deliver it to him without the order of the court. Murphy v. John Hoffman Co., 211 U. S. 562, 29 Sup. Ct. 154, 53 L. ed. 327; Whitney v. Wenman, 198 U. S. 539, 25 Sup. Ct. 778, 49 L. ed. 1157.

[a] Action for Value of Property.

(1) Thus possession of property by a marshal of a court of the United States under its writ against A is a complete defense to an action of replevin by B, the rightful owner of the property (Covell v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 176, 4 Sup. Ct. 355, 28 L. ed. 390; Freeman v. Howe, 24 How. [U. S.] 450, 16 L. ed. 749), (2) but does not prevent an action in trespass in a state court to recover the value of the property seized. Lammon v. Feusier, 111 U. S. 17, 4 Sup. Ct. 286, 28 L. ed. 327; Buck v. Colbath, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 334, 18 L. ed. 257.

[b] No Formal Order of Dismissal Filed.—Where a state court appointed a receiver of a national bank, but he never obtained possession of its property, and the original complainant discontinued, and the defendant filed a motion to dismiss, but no formal order of dismissal was entered, the pendency of the suit in that condition was no bar to a subsequent suit between the same parties in a federal court for the

vent a pursuit of the same right in both courts where such conflict does not arise.¹⁴ It does not preclude one not a party to the original suit or judgment from enforcing in the court of concurrent jurisdiction all remedies which he may have, against officers or parties, not involving the withdrawal of the property from the custody and jurisdiction of the court.¹⁵ Such rule does not interfere with the exercise of jurisdiction by the federal courts for the purpose of enforcing the supremacy of the constitution and laws of the United States,¹⁶ nor does it prevent the court which first acquires jurisdiction from deciding questions not involving possession.¹⁷

b. When Jurisdiction Ceases.—This exclusive jurisdiction continues as long as the property remains in custodia legis,¹⁹ and ceases whenever the litigation is ended, or when the property which is the subject of the controversy is no longer in the possession of the court first acquiring jurisdiction.²⁰ Jurisdiction, however, may be retained by reservations in the judgment or decree even after physical possession of the property has been abandoned.²¹

c. Remedy.—If the federal court first acquires jurisdiction, it may enjoin proceedings in the state court interfering therewith,²² and may, by ancillary proceedings, protect the title which it has decreed, as against all parties to the original suit and may prevent them from relitigating in a state court the questions then determined.²³

If the state court first acquires jurisdiction, the federal court will stay proceedings subsequently commenced therein.²⁴ This relief is not limited to the parties to the original action.²⁵

i. Where a State Is a Party.—The extension by the constitution of the judicial power of the United States to controversies between a state and citizens of other states, and the conferring on the supreme court of original jurisdiction in all cases in which a state shall be a party, does not of itself render the jurisdiction of the federal courts exclusive in such cases, but whether it shall be exclusive or concurrent with that of the courts of the various states is left to congress to determine.⁴⁸ The judicial code provides that the federal courts shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all controversies of a civil nature where a state is a party, except between a state and its citizens, or between a state and citizens of other states, or aliens.⁴⁹ Hence, in so far as the federal constitution and laws are concerned, a state court may take cognizance of suits by such state against citizens of other states,⁵⁰ subject to the right of the defendant to remove such suit to the proper federal court, in cases where such right of removal is authorized by the federal law,⁵¹ and subject, also, to the authority of the supreme court to review the judgment of the state court, if the case be one within its appellate jurisdiction.⁵²

[a] "The fact that a state court derives its existence and functions from the state laws is no reason why it should not afford relief; because it is subject also to the laws of the United States, and is just as much bound to recognize these as operative within the state as it is to recognize the state laws. The two together form one system of jurisprudence, which constitutes the law of the land for the state; and the courts of the two jurisdictions are not foreign to each other, nor to be treated by each other as such, but as courts of the same country, having jurisdiction partly different and partly concurrent. . . . It is true the sovereignties are distinct and neither can interfere with the proper jurisdiction of the other, as was so clearly shown by Chief Justice Taney, in the case of Ableman v. Booth, 21 How. 506, 16 L. ed. 169, and hence the state courts have no power to revise the action of the federal courts, nor the federal the state, except where the federal constitution or laws are involved. But this is no reason why the state courts should not be open for the prosecution of rights growing out of the laws of the United States, to which their jurisdiction is competent and not denied." Clafin v. Houseman, 93 U. S. 130, 23 L. ed. 833, quoted with approval in Second Employers' Liability Cases, 223 U. S. 1, 32 Sup. St. 169, 56 L. ed. 327.

8. Person in Custody of United States Court.—The courts or judges of the state have no authority to release a prisoner upon a habeas corpus when the prisoner is in the custody of the authorities of the United States, pursuant to a judgment of conviction by a federal tribunal of exclusive jurisdiction in the case.⁷² This rule is applicable where the prisoner is in custody of a United States court,⁷³ or commissioner,⁷⁴ or of a United States officer.⁷⁵

9. Persons in Custody of Military Authorities.—The authority of the United States courts over persons in custody under the authority or color of authority of the military authorities is exclusive,⁷⁶ and hence state courts cannot interfere to release or discharge persons so held in custody.⁷⁷

D. COURTS OF DIFFERENT STATES OR COUNTRIES.—Except as modified by statute,⁷⁸ the law is well settled that the mere pendency of a prior suit in personam between the same parties for the same cause of action, in a foreign country,⁷⁹ or in the courts of a sister state,⁸⁰ will not preclude a court from taking cognizance of a cause.⁸¹ It is only the definitive judgment on the merits that will be considered conclusive.⁸² In legal contemplation the jurisdiction of the courts of another state of the United States is foreign to the jurisdiction of the forum.⁸³ But notwithstanding these rules, the rule of priority applies as between the courts of the various states, and if the courts of one state have acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties to a cause, the courts of another state will not assume control of a subsequent suit between the same parties as to the same subject-matter

[a] The true reason is, every country or state is entirely sovereign and unrestricted in its powers, whether legislative, judicial, or executive, and hence does not acknowledge the right of any other nation, to hinder its own sovereign acts and proceedings. Nor will the courts of one country take notice of the courts of another, nor of its laws, or rules for the administration of justice; and therefore, the courts of a country, where a second suit is brought, will not dismiss a suitor, merely because initiatory steps have been taken elsewhere. It may be cause for staying proceedings; but, to abate a suit is to put a final end to its existence; should it do this, it might learn, too late, that no adequate remedy can be had elsewhere. Hatch v. Spofford, 22 Conn. 485, 498, 58 Am. Dec. 433.

in the amount over which a court has jurisdiction.⁹¹ The amount in which the claim made falls above or below the jurisdictional amount, is immaterial.⁹² The fact that payment of an obligation is not to be made in money is immaterial on the question of jurisdiction.⁹³

B. IN SUITS IN EQUITY.⁹⁴—Courts of equity, even in the absence of a statute refuse to take cognizance of trivial demands.⁹⁵ But the intrinsic value of the property immediately involved is not the sole criterion, and even though such value be small, if the property be of peculiar value to the owner, or other rights or property affected by the suit be the important matter, equity will not decline jurisdiction.⁹⁶

[a] Basis of Rule.—See Carr v. Iglehart, 3 Ohio St. 457, 458. The ancient rule "protects this court, and, what is of more importance, protects defendants against 'expensive and mischievous litigation about trifling matters which in consequence of the insignificance of the amount involved would do the parties themselves more harm than good.' . . . The machinery of the court of chancery is not adapted to the determination of controversies which involve merely a trifling sum of money, a sum less than $50." Kelahr v. English, 62 N. J. Eq. 674, 50 Atl. 902.

[a] In a suit to reform a deed the small value of the land omitted is not controlling. "There was omitted from the deeds about one-twenty-seventh of an acre. The value of the omitted land upon the basis of the purchase price, respondent points out, is eighty-three dollars, but we cannot agree with respondent that because these are the facts, equity will treat the omitted land as a minute discrepancy of no material importance. The price or value of omitted lands is, of course, an element in determining whether or not equity will take cognizance of a suit to recover the omitted portion.

At the present day, the matter is frequently regulated by statutes which expressly determine the amount or value which must be involved in order to confer jurisdiction.⁹⁷ The amount in controversy or the matter in demand, governs in suits to resist the payment of money, as well as it does in actions to obtain the payment of a money demand.⁹⁸ In some jurisdictions the limitation applies to money demands.⁹⁹

C. COUNTERCLAIMS AND SET-OFFS.—The general rule is that a set-off, cross-complaint or cross-demand must not exceed in amount the sum of which a court is given general original jurisdiction.¹ The fact that the plaintiff's claim, if allowed, would reduce the amount of the defendant's recovery to a sum within the jurisdiction of the court does

. . . But in a suit for land, value is by no means the all-controlling and determinative consideration. The omitted land may be of great importance to the value of plaintiff's remaining land. It may have a peculiar value, pretium affectionis, in plaintiff's eyes. Many other considerations may enter into the matter making it of importance to plaintiffs to recover that which is rightfully theirs." Danielson v. Neal, 164 Cal. 748, 750, 130 Pac. 716.

[b] If property has a special, personal and peculiar value to its owner, apart from the intrinsic worth, a court of equity will afford relief. Wilkinson v. Stitt, 175 Mass. 581, 56 N. E. 830.

[a] Limitation of Jurisdictional Amount Applies to Both Parties.—"In no case for the recovery of money will the answer of defendant be referred to in determining the question of the court's jurisdiction of the plaintiff's cause of action. The action as stated in the complaint controls that question. Precisely the same rule applies to defendant where he interposes a counterclaim. A counterclaim is a cross-action against the plaintiff, and to entitle a defendant to be heard thereon in that court the cause of action stated by him must be within the limits of the court's jurisdiction." *Duresen v. That means that a trial may be had when one of the parties claims that he is entitled to a recovery of over $200, which recovery of course the opposing party disputes. The amount in dispute is therefore in excess of the jurisdictional sum limited by the statute, and it is the amount in dispute, not what may be ultimately recovered, that is the test of jurisdiction." *Clancy v. court's jurisdiction.⁴ In some jurisdictions, the demand made in the complaint is regarded as the sole test of jurisdiction even though the amount demanded in a counterclaim is above the jurisdictional amount.⁵ In still other jurisdictions, a set-off or counterclaim in excess of the court's general jurisdiction may be pleaded but the court will thereupon on motion of either party remove the case to a court having jurisdiction of the amount involved.⁶

But a defendant may, as a pure matter of defense and without seeking affirmative relief, set up and rely upon a cause of action or transaction involving more than the amount over which the court would have original jurisdiction,⁷ though if affirmative relief is demanded tion set forth in the complaint);

Weinstein v. Helfenberg, 78 Misc. 190,
139 N. Y. Supp. 303.

[a] "The reason for this discrimination between plaintiff and defendant, in respect to the amount of their claims, is apparent. The plaintiff chooses his forum and has no excuse for coming into a justice's court with a claim which exceeds the jurisdiction of that court. The defendant, on the other hand, is compelled to come into the justice's court to make his defense; and must be permitted to interpose such counterclaim as he has without reference to its amount." *Heigle

[a] Affirmative matter in the answer, improperly designated as a coun-terclaim but in reality merely constituting a defense and on which no affirmative judgment could be recovered, may properly be pleaded though the amount therein involved is above the court's jurisdiction. Lynch v. Free, 64
Minn. 277, 66 N. W. 973.

[b] A pleading which is in effect no more than a plea of payment, is good although it sets forth a transaction involving more than the amount such a claim is beyond the jurisdiction of the court.⁸

The pleading of a counterclaim beyond the jurisdiction of the court does not oust the court of jurisdiction of the cause of action stated in the complaint.⁹

A counterclaim or cross-demand which is in amount below the jurisdiction of the court, cannot be set up where it arises out of a distinct contract or transaction other than that involved in the complaint;¹⁰ but where it arises out of the transaction set forth in the complaint or is connected with the subject-matter of the action and is pleaded as purely defensive matter in reduction or extinguishment of the claim of the plaintiff, the fact that it may be below the jurisdictional amount is immaterial.¹¹

A counterclaim or set-off in an amount in excess of the jurisdiction of the justice court cannot be interposed on appeal;¹² nor can an appellate court which exercises a purely derivative and appellate jurisdiction, reduce the amount of an excessive counterclaim so as to bring over which the court has jurisdiction. Eule v. Dorn, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 520, 92 S. W. 828.

[c] Matter in recoupment is subject to the same general rules. "In an action before a justice the defendant may recoup on account of any liability, whether in contract or tort, arising out of or connected with the demand sued on, which goes to abate or reduce the amount claimed, by showing a partial failure of consideration, or that the damages claimed are not as great as claimed by plaintiff. This is strictly a defensive recoupment and the justice has jurisdiction to entertain it if he has jurisdiction of the plaintiff's demand to which it is an incident. But if the defendant asks to recoup on account of a cause of action existing in his favor, which admits the value and amount of plaintiff's demand and assumes to oppose it by showing damages in his favor on this other cause of action equal to or in excess of the plaintiff's demand, the court cannot entertain it by way of recoupment or counterclaim unless it has jurisdiction to entertain the cause of action upon which the cross-damages are claimed." Emery v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. Ry. Co., 77 Mo. 339, 350. And see Kienzle v. Gardner, 73 N. J. L. 258, 63 Atl. 10; Hurst, Miller & Co. v. Everett, 91 N. C. 399.

It is urged that this amount is so small that it should be disregarded. But the dividing line between the appealable and the non-appealable case is fixed by the statute, and is necessarily arbitrary. Being arbitrary and fixed, it is always certain and ascertainable in advance, and in its practical application is quite as equitable, if not more so, than if it were elastic. The fact that the excess over $25 is only a few cents in this case is quite immaterial; a few cents being as effectual as a few dollars to confer the right of appeal.” *Noland v. [a] Consolidation of several cases on appeal is allowed in a proper case, although the aggregate amount demanded is in excess of the jurisdiction of the lower court. 22. Vance v. McHugh, 187 Mo. App. 708, 173 S. W. 80.

[a] Reason for the Rule.—"It must be the same identical case which was tried by the justice and not a new case. Upon the trial of the appeal no new cause of action can be relied upon. The same action may be tried anew, but no new action is to be tried. Nor can the demand be increased by pleading or otherwise beyond the jurisdic-

change the rule. It has authority, however, to determine the jurisdictional question involved.²³

c. Waiver.—On appeal the defeated party may challenge the jurisdiction of the court to try the action upon its merits for want of jurisdiction of the lower court over the subject-matter, appearing on the face of the record,²⁴ even though no objection was made by him during the trial in the lower court.²⁵ No action taken by a party during the trial can estop him from raising the question of want of jurisdiction in this respect,²⁶ and, on appeal, the court may of its own motion and in the absence of a plea, where the matter appears on the face of the pleadings, declare that the lower court acted without jurisdiction.²⁷ It has been held in some jurisdictions, however, that if the court hearing the appeal would have had original jurisdiction of the cause of action the defendant may waive all objection to the lack of jurisdiction below.²⁸

E. DETERMINATION OF THE AMOUNT.—1. In Contract Actions.

a. In General.—The amount in controversy is considered by most courts, for the purpose of determining the matter of jurisdiction, to be the amount claimed by plaintiff in his complaint,²⁹ unless bad faith

the judgment by allowing the successful litigant to remit that portion of the recovery which is in excess of the jurisdiction,³⁵ and if the claim made is in excess of the court's jurisdiction, the fact that the recovery obtained was within the jurisdictional amount does not render the judgment valid.³⁶ On the other hand, if the court has acquired jurisdiction of the action, the amount claimed being one within its jurisdiction, the fact that the recovery was for an excessive amount does not prevent the plaintiff from remitting the excess and taking a valid judgment for an amount within the jurisdiction of the court.³⁷ It has been held, however, in some cases, that the amount finally recovered,

[a] Two reasons have been advanced as the foundation of the rule: (1) If the verdict were the test a verdict for less than the jurisdictional amount or for the defendant would never be conclusive on the parties, who could relitigate the issues at will; (2) "it would be a very inconvenient, uncertain and unsatisfactory rule because the parties would, in many cases, be subjected to all the trouble, expense, and anxiety incident to a vexatious and protracted litigation before they could, by possibility, know whether the court had jurisdiction of the controversy or not," and then if they were mistaken, would be forced to again resort to another tribunal. *Heilman v. [a] A judgment for an excessive amount is erroneous but not void, in such a case. Freeman v. W. B. Walker & Sons (Tex. Civ. App.), 175 S. W. 1133.

[b] Where interest, which has accumulated since the institution of the action operates to entitle the plaintiff to recover a total amount which would be in excess of the original jurisdiction of the court, judgment for such amount may properly be rendered. J. F. Siensheimer & Co. v. Maryland Motor Car Ins. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.), 157 S. W. 228. But see Sulzberger & Sons Co. v. Hille (Tex. Civ. App.), 187 S. W. 992; *McCormick Harvest. Mach. Co. v. rather than the amount claimed, is the test of jurisdiction,³⁸ but even in such case, if an excessive amount is recovered, the trial court has jurisdiction to award a new trial and, if it does, the case stands as though no trial had ever been had.³⁹

b. Ascertainment of the Amount Claimed.—In most jurisdictions it is the claim made in the ad damnum clause of the complaint which is looked to in order to determine the extent of the plaintiff's claim;⁴⁰ though in some states, the amount sought to be recovered is to be ascertained from the facts alleged in the body of the complaint, rather than from the ad damnum clause,⁴¹ jurisdiction being determined by the amount for which, in the aspect of the case most favorable to the

[a] Rule Stated.—“It has been generally held that the amount shown in the statement of the cause of action, and not the amount for which recovery is sought in the prayer of the petition, must be looked to in determining the amount in controversy in a suit and that the sum of the items shown in the statement of the cause of action, and not the general statement of the amount claimed to be due will determine the question of what is the amount in controversy.” Willett plaintiff, judgment could be rendered on the facts set out.⁴² In still other jurisdictions the amount claimed in the ad damnum clause controls except where it clearly appears on the face of the complaint that the amount which can be recovered in any event either is,⁴³ or is not,⁴⁴ within the jurisdiction of the court. It has been held that a bill of particulars may be consulted in this connection.⁴⁵

In a justice's court, the general rules heretofore stated apply where the plaintiff files a written pleading; if the pleadings are oral, the test of jurisdiction is usually the amount stated in the summons.⁴⁶

2. In Tort Actions.—The general rule is that the amount claimed by the plaintiff determines the amount in controversy,⁵³ and a recovery of less than the jurisdictional amount does not render the judgment void.⁵⁴ If it appear on the face of the complaint that the plaintiff cannot recover all the damages laid in the ad damnum clause of the complaint then the amount in controversy or the demand, is the highest of particulars where its claim is within the court's jurisdiction: "In an action on an account, brought before a justice of the peace, where the only complaint is the account itself, which shows on its face, that the amount due exceeds the jurisdiction of such justice, and the demand is in no way limited, the court should sustain a motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction. But when a complaint is filed to recover upon an account and a bill of particulars, giving the items of the account, is filed with the complaint and the amount shown to be due by the bill of particulars exceeds the jurisdiction, while the demand in the complaint is within the jurisdiction of the justice, the amount demanded in the complaint controls and determines the question of jurisdiction." *Elgin v. amount which the plaintiff could recover on the facts as stated.⁵⁵ In actions of a penal character where presentation of a claim is a condition precedent to the maintenance of the action, the amount stated in the claim has been held to be the test of the amount in controversy.⁵⁶ If the claim made is for an amount not within the court's jurisdiction the fact that the court renders judgment for an amount within its jurisdiction, is immaterial; the judgment is void for want of power in the court to render it.⁵⁷ But if the case is one within the court's jurisdiction the successful party may remit the excess of a judgment which exceeds the jurisdictional amount.⁵⁸

3. In Suits in Equity.—The amount claimed in the bill is the test of jurisdiction;⁵⁹ the fact that less than the jurisdictional amount is found to be due does not oust the court of jurisdiction.⁶⁰ Where an equitable remedy is sought, the value of the subject-matter of the suit is sometimes made the test of jurisdiction.⁶¹

4. Counterclaims and Set-Offs.—The general rule that the amount claimed in the pleading is the test of jurisdiction applies to counterclaims,⁶² and set-offs, where affirmative relief is claimed.⁶³ The several claims of the plaintiff in the complaint and the defendant in a counterclaim, are not to be considered as together constituting the amount in controversy.⁶⁴

[a] Illustrations.—In Madison v. Spitsnogle, 58 Iowa 369, 12 N. W. 317, the plaintiff sued on a contract to pay money for medicines furnished defendant; the defendant denied performance and by way of counterclaim alleged that he had been treated in an unskillful manner: "In a certain sense there was [a controversy involving more than $100]. That is, by combining the claims of both parties there was one hundred and ten dollars in controversy. But both parties do not invoke the jurisdiction of this court, and we think the true construction of the statute is, that it must appear from the pleadings that it was possible for the justice, consistent with the pleadings, to render judgment against one of the parties to the action for more than one hundred dollars. It is certain this could not have been done."

Where a counterclaim to the full limit of the court's jurisdiction is interposed, the fact that want or failure of consideration is pleaded as a defense to plaintiff's cause of action does not operate to increase the defendant's claim above the jurisdictional amount. *Broderick v. legality of plaintiff's claim in part, operates to reduce the amount in controversy, to that extent, so far as the appeal is concerned,⁶⁸ but the action of the appellate court in eliminating from further consideration a part of the claim in suit does not oust it of jurisdiction, even though the amount remaining in controversy is less than that over which appellate jurisdiction is conferred.⁶⁹ In those cases in which the original jurisdiction of a justice of the peace depends upon the value of the property rather than the amount in controversy, the jurisdiction of an appellate court ordinarily is determined by reference to such value;⁷⁰ in actions for the recovery of personal property, the value of the property and the damages claimed for its detention are to be considered together.⁷¹ Appeals in garnishment cases are governed by the amount of the principal debt rather than that of the garnishee.⁷² In claim cases, growing out of the levy of an execution an appeal lies if either the amount of the execution or the value of the property levied upon is within the jurisdictional amount.⁷³

b. Amount of the Judgment.—In a few states the amount of the judgment rendered by the justice of the peace is made the test of the appellate court's jurisdiction.⁷⁴

c. Costs.⁷⁵—Where appellate jurisdiction is determined by the amount of the judgment rendered, costs are not to be included,⁷⁶ and the same rule applies where the amount of the claim made by plaintiff is regarded as the test of appellate jurisdiction.⁷⁷

d. Interest.⁷⁸—Where the cause of action bears interest, the interest accruing from the date of institution of the suit to the date of judgment is to be included in determining appellate jurisdiction;⁷⁹ though in some states interest is, by statute, expressly excluded from consideration.⁸⁰ Judgment may be rendered by the appellate court for such an amount in excess of the jurisdiction of the justice's court as was occasioned by interest accruing after the taking of the appeal.⁸¹

e. Effect of a Counterclaim or Set-Off.—If a counterclaim or set-off has been interposed by the defendant and passed upon by the court, and disallowed, in whole or in part, the defendant may appeal from the judgment, if a sufficient amount be involved in his claim to confer jurisdiction on the appellate court,⁸² and he may also appeal if the jurisdictional amount was involved in plaintiff's case, irrespective of the amount of his counterclaim or set-off.⁸³ So, too, the plaintiff may appeal, where the amount of defendant's counterclaim is sufficient to authorize an appeal though his own claim is insufficient in amount.⁸⁴ A fictitious counterclaim, interposed for the purpose of insuring an appeal, will not operate to confer appellate jurisdiction,⁸⁵ and an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff will be dismissed where the amount of plaintiff's claim was not appealable and defendant's counterclaim shows on its face that no cause of action is stated therein.⁸⁶ If the counterclaim has been abandoned,⁸⁷ as by failure to offer evidence in support of it,⁸⁸ its averments cannot operate to confer appellate jurisdiction, but the fact that the appellate court determines that the counterclaim does not state a cause of action, does not oust it of jurisdiction of the appeal.⁸⁹

Amended Pleadings.—In jurisdictions in which the claim in the ad damnum clause of the complaint is the test of jurisdiction, it is commonly held that the claim there made may be increased,²¹ or diminished²² by amendment, where the court has jurisdiction of the subject matter, in order to bring the action within the jurisdiction of the court, provided the cause of action in such cases is not changed.²³ And it has been held that since an amendment is substituted for and speaks from the date of the original pleading, the amended pleading is the test of jurisdiction so far as the amount in controversy is concerned.²⁴ But in some states a complaint cannot be amended so as to bring the cause of action within the jurisdiction of the court, either by increasing²⁵ or diminishing²⁶ the amount claimed; though even in such states, where a

But where the facts pleaded present a cause of a nature belonging to the jurisdiction of the court and the lack of jurisdiction over the particular action results solely from the insufficiency of the amount of the relief demanded and the facts pleaded would sustain a money recovery in an amount falling within the jurisdiction, an amendment of the petition that merely so expands the amount

claim is apparently for an amount exceeding the jurisdiction of the court, if it is not so in fact, this may be set forth by an amendment.²⁷ An amended complaint made and filed with the consent of both parties, in which a cause of action within the jurisdiction of the court is stated, confers jurisdiction upon the court.²⁸

In jurisdictions in which actions are commenced by service of a summons, which does not of itself disclose the nature of the action or the amount or value in controversy, the court acquires jurisdiction by such service and has power to amend the complaint, if it demands judgment for an excessive amount;²⁹ but if the complaint is served with the summons jurisdiction is acquired, if at all, upon the demand made in the complaint and this cannot be amended to confer jurisdiction.³⁰

If the action is commenced in a court of unlimited jurisdiction and for any reason is transferred to a court whose jurisdiction is limited in amount, the complaint may there be allowed to be amended, if necessary, to make such jurisdictional averments as the facts involved justify.³¹

The allowance of an amendment increasing the amount in controversy beyond the jurisdiction of the court, though an error, does not destroy the jurisdiction of the court, and may be corrected and the proceedings continued.³²

[a] Effect of Proceeding With the Case.—An amendment reducing the claim made to one within the court's jurisdiction was made during the trial and after the defendant had moved to dismiss for want of jurisdiction. "The subject matter of the action, both as respects its nature and the amount claimed, as disclosed by the amended complaint was clearly within the jurisdictional limits of the justice. Both parties thereafter, without objection, litigated it before the court by the introduction of testimony on each side, and the submission of the same upon argument to the jury. An appellate court cannot allow an amendment in an appealed case which will increase the amount claimed above that amount of which the trial court would have had jurisdiction,³³ nor can it, by allowing an amendment, cure a defect of jurisdiction in the trial court of either an insufficient or excessive claim.³⁴ If an amendment could have properly been allowed in the lower court it may be made on appeal.³⁵ A court to which an appeal has been taken cannot acquire original jurisdiction by allowing an amendment which will bring the action within its jurisdiction.³⁶

(B.) SUIT BY ONE ON BEHALF OF HIMSELF AND OTHERS SIMILARLY SITUATED. In an action brought by one or more persons as representative of a large number of persons similarly situated, and in order to prevent a multiplicity of suits, the amount in controversy is the entire fund sued for and not the plaintiff's interest or share in such fund;⁴⁰ and the same principle has been applied to actions by taxpayers.⁴¹

(II.) Several Defendants.—Where the amounts due from different defendants are based on a several, as distinct from a joint, liability, it is the amount claimed to be due from each individual which determines the jurisdiction of the court,⁴² even though by statute, several persons may properly be joined as parties defendant,⁴³ though it is sometimes

[a] Mechanics' Liens.—Creditors holding mechanics' liens are, under many statutes, authorized to bring a single action to enforce their claims, and in such cases, a several decree is rendered, and the claim of each lienholder is the test of jurisdiction. *Miller v. [a] In actions by a taxpayer to test the validity of a statute or ordinance the effect of which will be to increase the burden of taxation, generally, the test of jurisdiction is the amount involved to the public, rather than that which the taxpayer individually may have at stake. *Fontenot v. [a] Exception Where Liability May Be Enforced as an Incident to Another Action.—Where a motion for a judgment against several sureties on an indemnity bond is made in a case in which the court has jurisdiction, the fact that the liability of each surety is below the jurisdictional amount, does not deprive the court of jurisdiction over the motion, which is considered merely as a proceeding in the main case. Moore v. McSleeper, 102 Cal. 277, 36 Pac. 593.

[a] In actions by creditors of a corporation to enforce the statutory liability of stockholders for the debts of the corporation, it is the several obligation of each stockholder which is involved and the claim made against each individual stockholder which is the test of jurisdiction as to such individual. Myers v. Sierra Valley, etc. Assn., 122 Cal. 669, 55 Pac. 689; Hyman v. Coleman, 82 Cal. 650, 23 Pac. 62, 16 Am. St. Rep. 178; Evans v. Bailey, 66 Cal. xvii, 6 Pac. 424; *Derby v. [b] In an action involving title to land where plaintiff claims an entire tract, held under separate titles by several defendants claiming under a common grantor, the value of the property claimed rather than the value of the interests of the defendants is the test of jurisdiction. Derbes v. Romero, 28 La. Ann. 644.

[c] In creditors' bills in equity, several debtors may be joined, and if

held that where persons severally liable upon the same contract may be sued in one action, the whole amount claimed is the test of jurisdiction.⁴⁴ If one of several defendants be a proper party, the fact that his individual pecuniary interest in the subject matter in issue does not amount in value to a sum within the court's jurisdiction is immaterial.⁴⁵ On the other hand in eminent domain proceedings in which various property owners with independent rights are made defendants, it has been held that the separate interests of each party governs the jurisdiction, rather than the aggregate amount involved.⁴⁶

c. Several Obligations Constituting One Cause of Action.—In jurisdictions in which it is permissible to unite in a single cause of action claims dependent upon different obligations, the aggregate amount claimed by the plaintiff is the test of jurisdiction.⁴⁷

d. Uniting Causes of Action.—(I.) In General.—Where several causes of action are united in a single action in determining the amount in controversy, the courts are not agreed as to whether the test is the total amount demanded or whether each count must be treated separately. In some cases the latter rule has been followed; hence the uniting of several causes of action, so that the total amount demanded is brought within the jurisdictional limit, does not confer jurisdiction the amount due from all is within the jurisdiction of the court, it may act. Van Cleef v. Sickles, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 505.

[a] Rule Where Several Obligations Constitute but a Single Consideration. Where "the consideration is stated, indeed, to consist of several debts due by the defendants to the plaintiff; but they are stated, not as considerations respectively for several promises, but as constituting together only one consideration for a single promise," the aggregate amount claimed may properly be considered. Main v. First School Dist., 18 Conn. 214, 218.

[b] In assumpsit, (1) originally, the practice was "to make each demand to which the indebitatus count was applicable the subject of a separate indebitatus count. Subsequently, the mode used in the present case was adopted of combining several such demands in one such count and treating them all as forming the consideration of a single promise, and no objection appears to have been made to this course." *Main v. over claims which would otherwise be too small;⁴⁸ and if the several causes of action are separately within the jurisdiction of the court it retains jurisdiction of each, although the aggregate amount demanded is too large.⁴⁹ So also if some of the causes of action are within its jurisdiction, but others are either below or above the specified amount, the court retains jurisdiction of the former but not of the latter.⁵⁰

Many courts, however, look solely to the general claim of the complaint, irrespective of the number of causes of action which may be stated, therein,⁵¹ or the number of counts employed,⁵² and especially is this the rule where the amount "demanded" is made the test of jurisdiction.⁵³ But it has been held that jurisdiction cannot be conferred by the attempted joinder of causes of action which are not legally capable of being united in the same complaint.⁵⁴

The fact that the total amount involved exceeds the jurisdiction, is immaterial if the excess is due to the joinder of a cause of action over which the court has jurisdiction independently of the amount in controversy;⁵⁵ and the same is true if the right to recover the excess is waived by the prayer of the complaint.⁵⁶

(II.) On Several Notes. — The conflict in authority as to the test of jurisdiction where several causes of action are united⁵⁷ exists in the case of action on several promissory notes constituting separate causes of action, some courts looking to the amount of each note,⁵⁸ others to the aggregate amount.⁵⁹ Where the former rule prevails, it has been held that the fact that the notes are all of one series,⁶⁰ representing one

All these sums may be consolidated and sued for in the same action, and thus consolidated they would constitute the plaintiff's 'sum demanded.' . . . There is no statute that forbids this in terms or by reasonable implication, and we can see no just reason why it may not be done. (VI.) Consolidating Actions.—Where the aggregate amount demanded is the test, two or more actions cannot be consolidated into one if the total amount in controversy would thereby exceed the jurisdictional limit, since but one judgment is ordinarily rendered after consolidation.⁶⁹ But where several judgments may be rendered even when actions have been consolidated for the purpose of trial, each judgment is valid if within the jurisdictional amount.⁷⁰

72. As to what constitutes a split-

for where this is the case separate actions may, of course, be maintained and jurisdiction is determined by the amount claimed in each of the actions.⁷³ The objection that the claim made arose out of an indivisible contract which was split by the plaintiff for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction upon the court, must be made by a plea to the jurisdiction or there will be an implied waiver of it.⁷⁴

f. Accounts.—For the purpose of determining jurisdiction so far as dependent upon the amount in controversy, a single account is to be treated as one cause of action, irrespective of the number or size of the various items going to make up the account,⁷⁵ but different acting of actions, see the titles "Joinder of Actions;" "Successive Suits."

[a] "The rule that one having a single cause of action may not divide it and thereby confer upon a court of limited jurisdiction power to hear and determine the several suits, is well settled; but it does not follow that one who has two or more separate and distinct causes of action over which the inferior court has jurisdiction, must, in the interest of the defendant, combine them all in one suit in another court. The test is whether there is a single right of action, or more than one. One may have a single right of action embracing many items, or he may have a separate right to sue for each of several demands. In one case he must recover in one action; in the other he may sue in separate suits for each demand." McLendon v. Pass, 66 Miss. 110, 5 So. 234.

It is made necessary, under the statute, to present a claim of this kind to the representative of deceased before an action can be maintained upon it, but when the action is to be recovered is itself interest.⁸⁸ Under such a statute, however, interest on the amount claimed which is recoverable as damages in actions of tort, must be included as part of the principal, in determining jurisdiction;⁸⁹ and in contract actions where interest is claimed as an element of damages arising from the breach of the contract, and is not specially recoverable under the contract itself, it must also be considered.⁹⁰ In-

brought, it is upon the original claim or note." Gallagher v. McGraw, 132 Cal. 601, 64 Pac. 1080.

[a] Reason of the Rule.—"Our statutes make no provision for allowing interest in actions of this character [conversion]; but it belongs to a class of cases in which interest upon the amount of the pecuniary loss inflicted by the injury is allowed as a part of the damages. It is clear, that in a suit for the conversion of a specific sum of money, a recovery of that sum without an allowance for the use of the money would not adequately compensate the loss. The rate of interest established by law being a fixed standard of the value of the use of money is adopted by the court as the measure of that damage in such a case. When the statute does not expressly provide for the recovery of the interest, it is allowed not eo nomine, that is, not as interest but merely as damages. It would probably be more correct to say that rate of interest is resorted to in order to measure the damages accruing from the loss of the use of the money. As in case of the conversion of money, so in the case of the conversion of goods, and in many others in which the statute does not expressly create a legal liability for interest." Baker v. Smelser, 88 Tex. 26, 28, 29 S. W. 377, 33 L. R. A. 163.

[a] Unliquidated damages for breach of contract can only be the basis for the award of interest as damages, and therefore interest if claimed must be considered in determining jurisdiction. McNeill v. Casey (Tex. Civ. App.), 135 S. W. 1130.

[b] Where the sum due on a contract is ascertainable and a statute allows interest in such cases, the interest "is recoverable eo nomine and does not enter into consideration as a part of the amount in controversy affecting the jurisdiction of the court." Ewalt v. Holmes (Tex. Civ. App.), 165 S. W. 39. And see Willett v. Herrin (Tex. Civ. App.), 161 S. W. 26.

[c] Insurance policy on personal property is a contract which does not "ascertain the sum payable," and interest on the amount recoverable is to be treated as damages. Allemania Fire Ins. Co. v. Fordtran (Tex. Civ. App.), 128 S. W. 692.

terest as damages will only be considered in determining the amount in controversy when it is included in the prayer.⁹¹

A complaint which prays for an amount named, as damages, with interest thereon, brings the action within the application of this rule.⁹² A prayer for interest will be regarded as surplusage and disregarded where interest is not recoverable.⁹³ In the application of these general rules it is immaterial whether the interest be provided by law or contract,⁹⁴ or whether it be simple or compound interest.⁹⁵

(II.) Computation. — Interest is to be computed, in most jurisdictions, as of the date the suit is instituted;⁹⁶ and this rule applies to interest which is claimed as damages.⁹⁷ But it has been held that subsequently

[b] Prayers Construed.—(1) Prayer for "judgment against defendant for the sum of $1000 [the jurisdictional amount], with interest thereon, as provided by law," is a prayer for interest on the judgment when rendered and not on the amount claimed as damages. Chicago, R. I. & G. Ry. Co. v. Whaley (Tex. Civ. App.), 177 S. W. 543. (2) Where a prayer is for "judgment for his damages, interest, and costs of suit," the prayer for interest is referable to interest on the judgment which might be rendered. *Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. accruing interest cannot be included in the judgment if the jurisdictional amount is thereby exceeded,⁹⁸ though there is authority to the contrary.⁹⁹ It is the interest claimed or due when the original complaint, and not an amended complaint, was filed which is considered.¹

h. Penalties and Punitive Damages.—If to the amount sought to be recovered a statute authorizes, under the existing circumstances, the infliction and addition of a penalty, this penalty is to be considered in determining the aggregate amount in controversy.² Double or treble damages, allowed by statute and claimed in good faith, are also to be considered,³ though in some jurisdictions such damages are regarded as merely incidental to the actual recovery and are not considered in determining the question of jurisdiction.⁴

of jurisdiction,⁷ even though the complaint states that a specified sum constitutes a reasonable attorney's fee;⁸ and the same rule is applied where they are treated as a statutory penalty.⁹ In those jurisdictions where the claim made governs the amount in controversy,¹⁰ if attorney's fees are claimed they must be taken into consideration unless the complaint affirmatively shows as a matter of law that they are not recoverable;¹¹ and it has even been held that a good faith claim of such fees governs although it is apparent, as a matter of law, that the claim cannot be sustained¹² though the weight of authority is to the contrary.¹³ In other jurisdictions, however, the pleading must show that the party is entitled to such fees.¹⁴ But the fact that the pleadings show a proper case for the allowance of attorney's fees does not authorize the court to consider such fees in determining the jurisdiction, if no claim for them is made.¹⁵ debt be remitted, but a portion of the interest,²⁵ attorney's fees,²⁶ or statutory penalty,²⁷ may be abandoned in order to confer jurisdiction on the court.

In actions in which the value of the property is the test of jurisdiction and recovery of the property is sought or, in the alternative that possession of the property cannot be given, damages in a specified amount, a party cannot by remitting the excess amount claimed as an alternative remedy, confer jurisdiction upon the court,²⁸ because in such cases the value of the property remains the test of jurisdiction.²⁹ The remission, when made, is in effect a partial release, and discharges and destroys that portion of the debt or claim.³⁰

In a few jurisdictions the right of either party to remit a portion of the obligation without the consent of the other party, is denied,³¹ nor can the plaintiff credit on his demand a distinct and independent debt owing from him to the defendant.³² Even in these jurisdictions,

(II.) Procedure. — The remission of the excess portion of an obligation may be evidenced by the act of the plaintiff in voluntarily entering a credit or executing a release of an amount sufficient to reduce the claim to one within the jurisdiction of the court.³⁵ In some jurisdictions, the manner in which the remittitur shall be made is prescribed by statute.³⁶ By asking judgment for an amount less than the full amount of his claim a plaintiff waives that portion of it which is in excess of the court's jurisdiction.³⁷ In some jurisdictions, the remis-

[a] Reason for the Exception.—“In any case where the amount of the demand which the plaintiff holds against the defendant is fixed and certain by the express agreement of the parties, or becomes so by implication of law, the amount of such demand can not be reduced by the creditor so as to bring the same within the jurisdiction of a given court without the consent of the defendant, unless there is a statute which expressly authorizes such a proceeding. But there are many claims which one person may hold against another where the amount due is not fixed by express agreement and does not become certain by implication of the law and what shall be the extent of the claim that the injured party shall assert against the wrong-doer is a matter left to the determination of the party when he brings suit, the amount of the recovery, of course, being left to the determination of the jury, under the evidence in the case. Claims of this character may arise out of contract or out of tort. In neither class of cases is the plaintiff bound to claim all of the damages which might be the subject of a legal recovery.” Jennings v.

Dougherty*, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 487, the creditor endorsed on the note: “I relinquish all the within note that is over fifty dollars.”

[b] Furnishing a memorandum to the clerk, stating the demand of plaintiff in an amount within the court's jurisdiction is insufficient, at least on appeal, where the facts conferring jurisdiction must affirmatively appear. Trapp v. Mersman, 183 Mo. App. 512, 167 S. W. 612.

36. Brock v. Scott, 159 N. C. 513, 75 S. E. 724. See Dalton v. Webster, 82 N. C. 279; Felt v. Felt, 19 Wis. 193, credits must be endorsed on a note to give a justice jurisdiction if it was originally over $100.

[a] Statutory Forms.—“The plaintiff in this action forgives and remits to the defendant so much of the principal of this claim as is in excess of two hundred dollars, together with the interest on said excess.” Brock v. Scott, 159 N. C. 513, 75 S. E. 724, in justices' courts.

sion may be made at any time before judgment is rendered;³⁸ the better rule, however, in view of the principle that it is the amount claimed in the complaint which determines jurisdiction, is that the remission must be made before or at the time suit is instituted.³⁹ A remission cannot be made after the trial is concluded,⁴⁰ or after an appeal has been taken.⁴¹

[a] Actions Involving the Right to an Office of Profit.—(1) The value of the office is the test of jurisdiction. State v. De Vargas, 28 La. Ann. 342; State v. De Gress, 72 Tex. 242, 11 S. W. 1029 (quo warranto); State v. Owens, 63 Tex. 261; Harris v. Williamson, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 65, 99 S. W. 713. Compare Dean v. State, 88 Tex. 290, 30 S. W. 1047, 31 S. W. 185. (2) "An office of profit is property and can be sued for by the person claiming title thereto just as suits may be brought for the recovery of any other character of property, and in such greater number of actions, it is the amount sought to be recovered or claimed as damages which is to be considered.⁴³

2. How Determined.—a. Generally.—In actions in which the value of the property in dispute is the test of jurisdiction, the general rule is to regard the value as alleged in the complaint in determining the question.⁴⁴

b. In Actions for the Recovery of Personal Property.—Various rules are applied to determine the value of personal property as the ground of jurisdiction, in actions to recover its possession. Under some authorities the value of the property as alleged in the complaint is the test of jurisdiction.⁴⁵ In other jurisdictions, the value stated in the accompanying affidavit is either conclusive,⁴⁶ in the absence of bad suits the value of the office or property in controversy determines the jurisdiction of the court." Harris v. Williamson, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 65, 99 S. W. 713. (3) A salary attached to the office after a person's election invests the office with a value which determines jurisdiction. Krakauer v. Caples, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 264, 23 S. W. 1036.

[b] In actions by judgment creditors (1) attacking pretended purchases or sales by or in behalf of the judgment debtor, the value of the property involved and not the amount of the judgment held by the creditor is the test. Chaffe & Sons v. De Moss, 37 La. Ann. 186; State v. Judges, etc., 33 La. Ann. 1351; Queyrouze v. Thibodeaux, 30 La. Ann. 1114. (2) The fact that the creditor attacks the transaction only in so far as his particular claim is concerned, does not affect the rule. Godshaw v. Judges of Second Circuit Court of Appeals, 38 La. Ann. 643. Compare Loeb v. Arent, 33 La. Ann. 1085.

[c] In a suit to restrain the sale of specific property, it is the value of the property which determines jurisdiction. Smith Drug Co. v. Rochelle (Tex. Civ. App.), 135 S. W. 258.

[a] Reason for the Rule.—"The jurisdiction of the courts was not intended to be left as a matter of conjecture to be acquired and liable to be defeated, by honest differences upon a mere matter of opinion." Ball, Brown & Co. v. Sledge, 82 Miss. 749, 35 So. 447, 100 Am. St. Rep. 654.

[b] Where the value is not stated either in the affidavit or declaration and the jury returns a valuation below the court's jurisdiction, the action faith,⁴⁷ or at least prima facie evidence of the value of the property.⁴⁸ In still other courts the value fixed by an appraisal made by persons summoned and sworn by the officer who levies the writ,⁴⁹ or the value certified to by such officer,⁵⁰ is determinative of the question. In other courts the real value of the property as determined from the evidence adduced at the trial,⁵¹ is the final test of jurisdiction, and if from the evidence it appears that the property has a greater value than the court is given jurisdiction over, it has no right to determine the right of property involved but must order its return to the defendant,⁵² and the action must be dismissed.⁵³ In some jurisdictions, whenever the defendant in replevin is entitled to recover the value of property replevied, judgment may be rendered in his favor for the real value es-will be dismissed. Stephen v. Eisman, 54 Miss. 535.

[c] The fact that the jury fixed the value of the property at an amount in excess of the court's jurisdiction is immaterial, the plaintiff's recovery being limited by the value stated in the affidavit. Johnson v. Tabor, 101 Miss. 78, 57 So. 365.

The proof must go further and show that the valuation was knowingly and purposely falsely magnified or diminished in order to avoid the constitutional limitations of jurisdiction.” Ball, Brown & Co. v. Sledge, 82 Miss. 749, 35 So. 447, 100 Am. St. Rep. 654.

established by the evidence not exceeding the jurisdictional limit of the court,⁵⁴ but in others the court may give defendant judgment for the full value of the property even though this value be in excess of its ordinary jurisdiction.⁵⁵ Where the property replevied has been returned to the defendant, and the case proceeds as one for damages only, if the court ascertains the value of the property and damages to be an amount in excess of its jurisdiction, it may allow the plaintiff to remit the excess.⁵⁶

execution purchaser, who refuses to complete the purchase, to recover the statutory proportion of his bid, the court from which the execution issued has jurisdiction although the amount sought to be recovered is below its ordinary jurisdiction.⁶⁴ On a motion to set aside an execution, jurisdiction is to be determined from the amount stated on the face of the execution.⁶⁵

3. Liens and Mortgages.—Jurisdiction over actions to enforce liens is to be determined by the amount of the debt, rather than by the value of the property subject to the lien,⁶⁶ except where, by statute, jurisdiction over such matters is expressly given to particular courts, irrespective of the amount in controversy or the value of the property involved.⁶⁷ But where the suit is instituted by a land owner to protect his property against a lien asserted against it, the value of the land and not the amount of the claim is controlling.⁶⁸

and the same rule applies to suits to redeem mortgaged property.⁷⁰ A court having general jurisdiction to foreclose mortgages may enter a deficiency judgment for any amount even though there is a monetary limitation on its general jurisdiction.⁷¹ In some jurisdictions, in an action to foreclose or enforce a chattel mortgage, or lien on personal property, the value of the property mortgaged is the test of jurisdiction,⁷² at least in cases in which the value of the mortgaged premises is greater than the debt secured;⁷³ but where the debt is greater than

Conn. 146. Ga.—De Vaughn v. Byrom, 110 Ga. 904, 36 S. E. 267 (chattel mortgage); Aycock v. Subers, 73 Ga. 807. Wis.—Page v. Harrison, 20 Wis. 323.

[a] The right to have a prior mortgage set aside, in a foreclosure action, constitutes a distinct cause of action, which may or may not be joined with the foreclosure suit, at the election of the plaintiff, and the matter in demand in such an action is the amount of the mortgage debt, and if this is not within the jurisdiction of the court, the court can render no judgment on this cause of action irrespective of the demand in the foreclosure suit. Cantoni v. Betts, 70 Conn. 386, 39 Atl. 604.

[b] Action in Aid of Foreclosure. That an action is in aid of a foreclosure, does not extend the powers of a court of limited jurisdiction. "As a court of equity, the city court may take cognizance of subordinate controversies when appropriate to the full disposition of the main controversy before it; but as a court of limited jurisdiction it can take cognizance of no controversy, whether subordinate or not, where the matter in demand exceeds $500. In other words, the limitation of its jurisdiction controls its exercise of equity power." Cantoni v. Betts, 70 Conn. 386, 389, 39 Atl. 604.

70. Bronson v. Leibold, 87 Conn. 293, 87 Atl. 979; Lucking v. Wesson, 225 Mich. 443.

Blinn*, 43 Conn. 274.

[b] An action to set aside a quitclaim deed, executed under a mistake, on payment of the balance due on a contract to purchase, is analogous to an action to redeem and is governed by the same principles. Bronson v. Leibold, 87 Conn. 293, 87 Atl. 979.

5. Bonds.—In actions on bonds, given to secure the proper performance of obligations or duties it is the amount claimed in the action which ordinarily determines jurisdiction, and not the penalty of the bond.⁷⁹ Where, however, in an action on a bond, the judgment must be for the full amount of the penalty of the bond, to be discharged on the payment of the damages assessed, it is the amount of the penalty and not the damages claimed, which is the test of jurisdiction.⁸⁰ Where the instrument requires the obligor to deliver specified property or pay a sum named, it stands as security for the return of the property or payment of its value, and it is the value of the property and not the penalty named which is the test of jurisdiction.⁸¹

6. Tax Proceedings.—In actions or proceedings involving the collection, refunding or use of taxes, where the tax itself and not its relation to and effect on property is in question the amount of the tax generally determines the amount in controversy.⁸² But where the property interest affected by the tax is the basis of the action the value of the property involved governs the jurisdictional question.⁸³ Where jurisdiction exists by virtue of the character of the action, the amount involved is not material.⁸⁴

7. Forcible Entry and Detainer Proceedings.—In forcible entry and detainer proceedings, jurisdiction is sometimes conferred irrespective of the value of the property or its rental value:⁸⁵ in other states jurisdiction is made to depend upon the rental value of the premises,⁸⁶ and in still other jurisdictions the court may always award the recovery of possession in such actions but can only give damages in a limited amount.⁸⁷

8. Partition Suits.—In actions for a partition of property, the value of the property determine jurisdiction:⁸⁸ rather than the amount or value of plaintiff's interest.⁸⁹ The fact that on the sale more is received for the land than its appraised value, does not oust the court of jurisdiction.⁹⁰

9. Actions Involving Principal and Surety.—The amount of the principal obligation sued for rather than the sum for which different sureties are liable, is the test of jurisdiction in an action brought by the creditor to enforce their liability,⁹¹ and the same principle applies where the action is by a surety against his co-sureties, for contribution.⁹² In an action by a surety for reimbursement from his principal, the amount which with interest would fully reimburse the surety for the loss he has sustained and not the face value of the judgment which had been obtained against principal and surety, is the amount in controversy.⁹³

H. PARTIES AFFECTED.—Limitations on the monetary jurisdiction of the court apply to most classes of parties, including counties,⁹⁴ and public charitable institutions,⁹⁵ but not to the state itself, unless it is expressly mentioned in the statute.⁹⁶ Intervenor, in an action of which the court has jurisdiction, are not subject to the limitations.⁹⁷

I. POINT OF TIME CONSIDERED.—The amount in controversy or the value of the property involved is to be ascertained as of the date of the institution of the action.⁹⁸

J. LOSS OF JURISDICTION.—1. In General.—Where jurisdiction has once attached to and vested in a court by the institution in good faith of an action within its jurisdiction, the fact that by subsequent proceedings a portion of the complaint is eliminated from consideration leaving a claim for an amount which would not have been within the original jurisdiction of the court, does not affect its power to proceed court determines that a particular claim for damages is not within the law and cannot be maintained, does not operate to divest it of jurisdiction to proceed with the case, although the remaining damages would alone have been insufficient to confer jurisdiction,⁴ and the loss, after the institution of the action, of the right to recover a particular element of damages does not affect the court's jurisdiction.⁵ The fact that the claim is barred by the statute of limitations does not affect the question of jurisdiction.⁶

2. Partial Failure of Proof.—Failure to prove a part of a cause of action does not oust the court of jurisdiction,⁷ and where several causes of action are joined, the failure to establish one cause of action does not defeat jurisdiction though the total amount claimed is thereby reduced below the jurisdictional amount.⁸ It is, however, sometimes provided by statute that where the amount found due is less than the jurisdictional amount, the suit shall be dismissed,⁹ unless the amount claimed was reduced by a set-off successfully made by the defendant,¹⁰

5. Dwyer v. Bassett (Tex. Civ. App.), 29 S. W. 815.

[a] Loss of claim for exemplary damages by reason of the subsequent death of the plaintiff, does not divest the court of jurisdiction although less than the jurisdictional amount is claimed as actual damages. Dwyer v. Bassett (Tex. Civ. App.), 29 S. W. 815.

6. Burton v. Archinard (Tex. Civ. App.), 49 S. W. 684; Harrell v. Storrie (Tex. Civ. App.), 47 S. W. 838.

[a] Possibility that statute of limitations may be pleaded and thus the sum recoverable reduced below the jurisdictional amount does not show that the lesser amount only was recoverable since it cannot be known as matter of law that the statute will be pleaded, and if it is not pleaded the amount claimed may be recovered. Wells v. Cooper, 57 Conn. 52, 17 Atl. 281.

[b] Plea of statute of limitations as to a portion of the damages claimed does not divest the court of jurisdiction. Kelly v. Western Union Tel. Co., 17 Tex. Civ. App. 344, 43 S. W. 532.

9. Smith v. Allen, 142 Ala. 148, 37 So. 933, motion to dismiss is the proper remedy.

10. Camp v. Marian County, 91 Ala. 240, 8 So. 786; Wood v. Fowler, 37 Ala. 55. See Black v. Ryan, 194 Ala. 667, 69 So. 633.

[a] It will be presumed on appeal, in the absence of a bill of exceptions, where it appears that a setoff was pleaded, that it was successfully maintained and that plaintiff's recovery was reduced below the jurisdictional or unless the plaintiff makes and files an affidavit that the amount claimed was due, but a full recovery was defeated for some adequate reason.¹¹ In other jurisdictions the only penalty for a recovery of less than the jurisdictional amount, is the loss of the costs.¹²

3. Effect of Admission of Errors and Overcharges.—If errors be discovered in the computation of the amount claimed to be due, or if there be a mistake in failing to make proper credits, or in making overcharges, and such error is admitted by the plaintiff and called to the attention of the court before or during the trial, the court retains jurisdiction, although the effect of the admission is to reduce the amount claimed to be due below the amount over which the court is given jurisdiction,¹³ and the same is true of similar admissions in the pleadings.¹⁴ amount by reason of that fact, even though another reason is assigned by the court for its ruling. Camp v. Marian County, 91 Ala. 240, 8 So. 786. And see Black v. Ryan, 194 Ala. 667, 69 So. 633; Wynn v. Simmons, 33 Ala. 272.

[d] Necessary Only in Contract Actions.—(1) Such an affidavit must be filed in all actions ex contractu (First National Bank v. Pinson, 105 Ala. 588, 17 So. 182; Mills v. Long, 58 Ala. 458), (2) or the suit will be dismissed, as the provision of the code is mandatory. Buckner v. Vaught, 4 Ala. App. 593, 58 So. 813; O'Reilly v. Masterson, 3 Ala. App. 666, 57 So. 1013, action to recover a statutory penalty. [a] Rule Stated.—"It could make no difference as to the jurisdiction of the court whether counsel admitted an error of $45 overcharge, or whether it appeared in evidence by the testimony of witnesses." Rodley v. Curry, 120 Cal. 541, 52 Pac. 999.

14. C. M. Conover & Co. v. Maverick-Clarke Litho. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.), 115 S. W. 313, admission and tender of amount of set-off pleaded.

[a] Rule Stated.—"If upon the trial the defendant reduces the amount of judgment below $100 by proof of payment, that fact can have no more influence upon jurisdiction than a like reduction of judgment through failure of the plaintiff to prove any allegation of his complaint, and, as affecting jurisdiction, there is no distinction between payment alleged by defendant and proved by witnesses, and payment so alleged and proved by admissions of the plaintiff, whether in open court, or by failure to deny the allegation, or by express admission in his reply. In either case the court adjudges the amount due the plaintiff

An admission of indebtedness by the defendant in his answer does not affect the jurisdiction of the court.¹⁵

4. Effect of Failure of Equitable Cause of Action. — If a court in which both legal and equitable remedies are administered, acquires jurisdiction by reason of the equitable features of a case involving also a legal claim below the jurisdictional amount, it does not lose jurisdiction of the latter if the right to equitable relief for any reason fails, but may nevertheless render a money judgment.¹⁶

5. Effect of Partial Payment or Tender During Suit. — Payments on account of the principal debt made during the pendency of the action and reducing the amount due to a sum below the court's jurisdiction do not oust it of jurisdiction.¹⁷ The fact that defendant tendered a smaller amount than that claimed, in full satisfaction of the debt, does not make the balance or difference the amount in controversy.¹⁸

K. PLEADING. — The general rule is that in case of courts of general jurisdiction, the jurisdictional facts need not be pleaded, since in the absence of some averment to the contrary it will be presumed that such a court has jurisdiction;¹⁹ though from the nature of the case the facts as to the amount in controversy must ordinarily appear in the pleadings as an incident to the statement of the cause of action.²⁰ With respect to courts of limited or inferior jurisdiction, however, there can be no such presumption and the pleading must show that the case in the exercise of its jurisdiction, determined by the complaint." Prince v. Takash, 75 Conn. 616, 620, 54 Atl. 1003.

[b] Offsets pleaded by defendant and admitted to be due by the plaintiff do not oust the court of jurisdiction, although the amount claimed by plaintiff is thereby reduced below the jurisdictional minimum. Ratigan v. Hal-laway, 69 Tex. 468, 6 S. W. 785.

[a] In an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, a court although finding that the lien claimed is void, has jurisdiction to render a money judgment for less than the amount over which it has original jurisdiction. Becker v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. 313, 90 Pac.

[a] No presumptions in favor of jurisdiction can be indulged in the face of express allegations in the pleadings. Raymond v. Hinkson, 15 Mich. 113.

[b] Exemplary damages claimed but not authorized by any facts stated in the complaint, do not confer jurisdiction where the amount of actual dam-

is one within the jurisdictional limit as to the amount in controversy.²¹ But no particular form of averment is required;²² if from the allegations of the complaint it is a fair inference that the amount in controversy or the value of the property is within the jurisdictional limit, the pleading will be held sufficient.²³

[a] Rule Where Different Groups of Facts are Alleged.—If, in stating a cause of action, the plaintiff relies upon different and separable groups of facts, some of which disclose no cause of action upon their face, the jurisdiction of the court is to be determined by the amount of the claim resting upon those facts which are not subject to a general demurrer. Martin v. Jeffries (Tex. Civ. App.), 153 S. W. 658; Tyler v. Cocker, 58 Tex. Civ. App. 605, 124 S. W. 729; Lindale Brick Co. v. Smith, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 297, 118 S. W. 568.

[a] In an action to quiet title (1) an averment "that the value of the properties involved in this action does not exceed or equal the sum of two thousand dollars," was held sufficient. Greene v. Gibson, 53 Colo. 346, 348, 127 Pac. 239. (2) But an averment that "the amount herein involved and sued for does not equal nor exceed the sum of two thousand dollars," was held insufficient. Bloomer v. Jones, 22 Colo. [b] Judicial notice (1) was taken in Wight v. Roethlisberger, 116 Mich. 241, 74 N. W. 474, that "44 lots in the city of Grand Rapids are worth more than $100;" and (2) in Glidden

v. Norvell, 44 Mich. 202, 206, 6 N. W. 195, the court said: "We will not assume that a debt to secure which the debtor turned out fifteen hundred tons of number one iron ore, was not over one hundred dollars."

[b] A prayer for $100 "and over," $100 being the jurisdictional limitation, does not oust the court of jurisdiction as "the words 'and over' are void for uncertainty. They express nothing." Rockwell v. Perine, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 573.

[c] A quo warranto information for the usurpation of a franchise which does not allege the value of the franchise, is nevertheless sufficient to show that more than $500 is involved where "it alleges the collection of more than $80,000 [in tolls] within less than seven years." Morris v. State, 62 Tex. 728.

[d] An express averment (1) of the amount or value in controversy will override and control a prayer in the ad damnum clause for recovery of an amount in excess of the court's jurisdiction. Dunkle v. French, 51 Colo. 170, 116 Pac. 1039. But see supra, XII, E, 1; XII, E, 7. (2) And an averment of a value within the jurisdiction of the court will not control the court where from the facts alleged the real value is necessarily in excess of the jurisdiction. Learned v. Tritch, 6 Colo. 432.

[e] Averment of a Legal Conclusion

determine the question.²⁴ Where it is sought to confer jurisdiction by aggregating demands of any character, the complaint must set forth fully and clearly the various items relied upon as together constituting the jurisdictional amount.²⁵ After verdict, deficiencies in the complaint may be supplied and aided by matters alleged in the answer,²⁶ and, on appeal, an ambiguous or uncertain pleading is to be construed so as to support a jurisdiction assumed to be exercised by the lower court.²⁷

In suits in equity it has been held unnecessary to insert an averment as to the value of the matter in controversy,²⁸ but that the defendant must bring the question before the court by his pleadings,²⁹ though there is authority to the contrary.³⁰ In a suit for an injunction an allegation that unless the injunction issues plaintiffs will be injured in a named sum is sufficient.³¹

L. HOW QUESTION RAISED AND DISPOSED OF.—Where the amount in controversy is determined by the claims made in good faith in the complaint, an inspection of the pleading will ordinarily determine the question of jurisdiction, and a motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction may be made,³² or the point may be raised, in some jurisdictions,³³

[a] Rule Stated.—"We see no reason why a party defendant should be put to his plea denying the jurisdiction. An objection interposed by motion to dismiss is sufficient," especially in justice's courts. "It is well settled that a motion to dismiss a suit for want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter is never out of time. This cannot be waived by consent as want of jurisdiction over the person may be." Burns v. Henry, 67 Ala. 209, 210. See Memphis & C. R. R. Co. v. Hembree, 84 Ala. 182, 4 So. 392; *Eulless v. by demurrer; or the court may, of its own motion, dismiss the action.³⁴ Where the want of jurisdiction does not appear on the face of the complaint, it may be set up by plea in abatement,³⁵ or by answer,³⁶ but the objection cannot be made by motion.³⁷ A counterclaim in excess of the jurisdictional amount may be stricken,³⁸ and a motion to strike the case from the files may be made after judgment is rendered, the jurisdictional defect then being established.³⁹ No further valid proceedings can be taken after want of jurisdiction is established, other than those necessary to properly dispose of the case.⁴⁰

In equity practice, in suits on monied demands, if the amount claimed is below the jurisdictional amount, the bill is demurrable,⁴¹ and in bills not for monied demands, where a statement of the value of the property is not required, unless the defendant by some pleading raises the issue of its value, proof will not be received to establish a value below the court's jurisdiction.⁴²

such objection the defendant should ordinarily appear specially for this purpose.⁶³ If a defendant claims that the court has acquired no jurisdiction over his person, by reason of defects or irregularities in the process, or service thereof, his course is by special appearance and objections to the jurisdiction; and if he goes further, and enters a general appearance, or invokes the powers of the court for any other purpose than quashing the pretended process, or service thereof, the defects are waived;⁶⁴ but if he has appeared generally, he may be allowed to withdraw his appearance and file a plea to the jurisdiction.⁶⁵

Where the court has general jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action and the objection is to its jurisdiction over the particular case, if the want of jurisdiction does not appear on the face of the complaint objection must be made by plea or answer, depending upon the local practice.⁶⁶ Where the action is not instituted in the proper county or

[a] A plea seeking to make available the privilege accorded to a defendant by statutes, of being sued in a county other than that in which the action is brought, is a plea in abatement, and not a plea to the jurisdiction of the court. Bishop v. Camp, 39 Fla. 517, 22 So. 735.

[a] Amended Answer.—A defendant should plead the want of jurisdiction as soon as called upon to answer. If he answers without so doing, he cannot afterwards make the defense in an amended answer. Baker v. Union Stock Yards Nat. Bank, 63 Neb. 801, 89 N. W. 269, 93 Am. St. Rep. 484.

[a] Testing the sufficiency of the petition by demurrer, or by motion to make more definite,—to the end that it may be intelligently answered and defended, is not asking such affirmative relief as will deprive the defendant of the benefit of his objection to the jurisdiction. Commonwealth Cotton Oil Co. v. Hudson (Okla.), 161 Pac. 535.

[b] Coupling other grounds of demurrer with objections to the jurisdiction is not a waiver of want of jurisdiction under statutes providing that objections to jurisdiction of the court over the person where they appear upon the face of the complaint must be taken by demurrer. Fry v. Denver & R. G. R. Co., 226 Fed. 893; but such joinder is a waiver of the objection and a general appearance, under code provisions providing for special appearances for raising such objection. *Western Loan Co. v. [c] Objection to Amendment to Petition.—The question of a court's jurisdiction to entertain an action cannot be properly raised by presenting objections to an amendment to the plaintiff's petition, the allowance of which would make no change in the status of the case with respect to the matter of jurisdiction. Reed v. Equitable Trust Co., 115 Ga. 780, 42 S. E. 102.

E. WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS.—As has already been shown⁹⁶ the right to object to lack of jurisdiction of the subject matter cannot be waived;⁹⁷ but lack of jurisdiction over the person is waived by failing to make a seasonable⁹⁸ objection in the manner⁹⁹ prescribed by law. If an objection, properly and seasonably made, has been overruled and the point saved by proper exception, it is not waived by proceeding with the case on the merits,¹ though a contrary rule prevails in some states.² But if the defendant by cross-complaint or otherwise seeks affirmative relief after his objection has been overruled, he thereby submits to the jurisdiction and waives his objection.³

B. AMENDMENTS AS TO JURISDICTION.—1. In General.—Under the modern statutes permitting great liberality in amendments, it is ordinarily permissible where the facts existed at the commencement of the action to set up by amendment the necessary jurisdictional facts,⁵ unless the amendment sets up an entirely new and separate cause of action.⁶ Thus plaintiff may amend his complaint by showing defendant to be a resident of the forum,⁷ or showing the plaintiff's residence,⁸ or by changing the venue in a transitory action,⁹ or by setting up fraud committed within the jurisdiction of the court as a ground for jurisdiction,¹⁰ or alleging that the nonresident defendants have property

[a] Action for Forcible Taking Amended To Set up Fraud.—A suit to recover a slave forcibly taken away may be amended to set up a fraudulent combination to defraud plaintiff thereof. Evans v. Mills, 16 Tex. 196.

[b] An amendment which would set up a new cause of action and have the effect of depriving the defendant of the benefit of the defense of the statute of limitations which could be used against a new action, should not be allowed. Gilliam v. Life Ins. Co., 121 N. C. 369, 28 S. E. 470.

[c] New Cause of Action—Texas. Where the petition claimed a sum within the jurisdiction of the court, but a demurrer was sustained as to part of said demand, an amended complaint setting up a new cause of action is permissible. Wood v. Cate, 75 Tex. 215, 12 S. W. 535.

[d] Amendment of Removable Cause.—An amendment in the state court increasing the amount sued for over five hundred dollars after the defendant had pleaded and lost his right to remove the cause is permissible unless this was a device or artifice to prevent such removal. Austin v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 34 Minn. 473, 476, 26 N. W. 607.

[a] Such amendment is permissible

within the state,¹¹ or by omitting one of two separate causes of action over which the court had no jurisdiction,¹² or may amend the caption of the complaint so as to insert the name of the county and court in which filed.¹³ Such amendment should be allowed at any time during the progress of the cause and before the final judgment if no injustice is done thereby.¹⁴

2. In United States Courts.—The federal statutes authorize the court to allow either party to amend at any time any defect in the process or pleadings,¹⁵ and the courts are very liberal in allowing amendments to the declaration or other pleading, setting up jurisdictional facts.¹⁶ Thus the courts permit an amendment setting up facts showing defendant to be a citizen of the United States,¹⁷ or show the plaintiff to be an alien instead of a citizen as alleged,¹⁸ though the allowance thereof lies within the sound discretion of the court and is not reviewable unless abused,¹⁹ and will not be allowed unless the amendment will be likely to avail the plaintiff.²⁰ Likewise an amendment is permissible setting up a question arising under the constitution and laws of the United States,²¹ or to show diversity of citizenship between even after plea in abatement filed and exception to the jurisdiction of the court. Little v. Woodbridge, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. (Tex.), §152.

[b] Name of County.—The declaration in attachment may be amended by striking out "Georgia, Decatur County," and inserting "Georgia, Early County," the true venue of the cause being Early county, and the trial pending therein. Perry v. Mulligan, 58 Ga. 479.

C. PLEAS TO JURISDICTION.²⁸ — 1. Nature of Plea. — A plea to the jurisdiction differs at common law from a plea in abatement.²⁹ A plea to the jurisdiction is a dilatory plea³⁰ and must be specially pleaded.³¹

2. When Filed.³² — While a plea to the jurisdiction of the court over the subject matter may be filed at any time,³³ an objection to the jurisdiction of the court over the person or for other grounds in abatement of the action must be filed at the earliest possible moment,³⁴ which under some statutes is at the first term,³⁵ unless the plaintiff so amends his petition at a subsequent stage of the cause so as to render not by his attorney,⁴¹ notwithstanding a statute authorizes an attorney to make oath setting up issuable defenses.⁴² A joint plea to the jurisdiction must be verified by all the parties so pleading and not merely by one of them.⁴³

Form and Contents.—Forms of such pleas and of answers containing objections to the jurisdiction may be found elsewhere in this work.⁴⁴ The law has always required great accuracy and precision in the structure and form of such pleas.⁴⁵ They must be certain to every intent, and there must be proper averment of facts accurately and logically stated, excluding every intendment of jurisdiction.⁴⁶ It is not sufficient to deny the jurisdiction of the court within which the action is brought.⁴⁷ While a plea to the jurisdiction of an inferior court of limited jurisdiction need only show such court has no jurisdiction without showing the court plaintiff should have resorted to,⁴⁸ a plea to the jurisdiction in a court of general jurisdiction must not only show that the court assuming jurisdiction has none, but must allege that another court in the state has jurisdiction,⁴⁹ though a plea presenting facts showing that the subject matter is beyond the general jurisdiction of the courts of the state need not show what court has jurisdiction.⁵⁰ A plea to the jurisdiction over the person of the defendant, however, is

On the other hand, a jurisdiction conferred by statute, cannot be limited by the courts, by construction.³⁰ Statutes conferring a special jurisdiction are not to be limited by prior acts conferring general jurisdiction,³¹ and a statute conferring special jurisdiction on a justice of the peace does not operate as a limitation on his general powers.³²

As to matters within his jurisdiction, the action of a justice is as effectual as is the action of a higher court,³³ and when it is made to appear that jurisdiction has been acquired, the same presumptions are

It requires no argument to establish that the way to such courts should be smooth and easy. It was long ago declared to be the law that such inferior tribunals must keep strictly within the limits of the jurisdiction conferred upon them; but this does not mean that the superior courts are to be hostile to their judgments or solicitous to trip them up for every petty error. It means that the justices are to exercise only the jurisdiction conferred upon them by statute fairly interpreted." De Laval Separator Co. v. Hofberger, 161 Wis. 344, 154 N. W. 387.

[b] Higher Courts Cannot Control in Advance the Action of a Justice's Court.—An agreed case having been submitted to the higher court involving the question whether if defendants were arrested in execution of a civil judgment they would be entitled to receive a discharge from the justice's court, it was said: "It is not for the circuit court, nor for this court, to tell the justice of the peace, in advance, how he is to decide a case of which he has jurisdiction under the statute. Within the limits of his jurisdiction a justice of the peace is free from the control of any other court, except where an appeal is authorized by law. We cannot assume that the justice will not decide the question correctly and we express no opinion as to the remedy if he fails so to do." McGovern v. Hoffman, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 74, 105 S. W. 458.

[c] Judgment as Res Judicata. "Where a justice has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties, his indulged in favor of their proceedings, as in the case of courts of general jurisdiction.³⁴

The test of jurisdiction is whether the court had the power to enter upon the inquiry, and not whether its conclusion was right or wrong.³⁵

A change in the existing law governing the jurisdiction of justices of the peace is usually held to apply to existing causes of action,³⁶ but to be inapplicable to actions which have been commenced,³⁷ or to actions tried but pending on appeal.³⁸

In some states, in particular classes of actions, two justices of the peace must act together in order to acquire jurisdiction.³⁹

Officers who are made by law ex officio justices of the peace have the same jurisdiction as regular justices.⁴⁰

B. AS DEPENDENT UPON CONSTITUTIONAL LIMITATIONS.—Where the constitution of a state defines and limits the powers and jurisdiction of justice's courts, a statute which attempts to extend the jurisdiction beyond such limitations is ineffective;⁴¹ nor can a constitutional grant of power be limited by legislation.⁴² A statute cannot modify in any way the amount in controversy over which the court has jurisdiction under a constitutional provision;⁴³ but where constitutional provisions are regarded as a limitation, rather than a grant of powers, the judgment (until reversed on appeal) is as conclusive between the parties as the judgment of a court of record; and the judgment may be pleaded as such, and proven by an exemplification of his docket entries, etc." Gates v. Bennett, 33 Ark. 475, 485. See generally the title "Res Judicata."

legislature may extend the jurisdiction of justices to or reduce it below, the amount specified in the constitution,⁴⁴ or it may alter the territorial jurisdiction of the court,⁴⁵ and may confer jurisdiction upon or restrict it to, any classes of actions which are not expressly regulated by the constitution.⁴⁶

Under a constitution which authorizes the legislative body to establish such inferior courts as may to it seem advisable, the jurisdiction of justice's courts may be altered and extended by the legislature at will,⁴⁷ and this may also be done where the constitution provides that the powers and duties of justices of the peace shall be defined and regulated by law,⁴⁸ though under such a provision the legislature cannot so restrict the jurisdiction of justices of the peace as to work a virtual abrogation of the constitutional office.⁴⁹

Under a constitutional provision conferring general civil jurisdiction, with certain express exceptions, no other exceptions will be implied.⁵⁰ A constitutional provision that the jurisdiction of all justices of the peace shall be uniform is self executing;⁵¹ but does not extend

[a] Principle on Which Rule Based. "But it is said that, as the constitution enumerates the cases of which a justice has jurisdiction, all others are excluded. This overlooks the fundamental idea of a state constitution. Such instrument is not a grant of, but a limitation upon, the powers of the state. In the absence of any constitutional provision, the legislature could create courts and define their jurisdiction. The language we have quoted from the fundamental law is a limitation upon the power of the legislature, and, as it is not inhibited from giving justices of the peace jurisdiction of special or summary proceedings, the power exists and cannot be questioned." Class discriminations in statutes conferring jurisdiction are unconstitutional.⁵³

C. CONCURRENT AND EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION.—The jurisdiction of justices of the peace is not, necessarily, an exclusive one, but it is frequently shared by higher courts,⁵⁴ though in many states, express statutory provisions render their jurisdiction exclusive over various classes of actions,⁵⁵ especially those in which only a small amount is in controversy.⁵⁶ A statute which merely extends the jurisdiction of justices' courts over specified classes of action does not operate to deprive higher courts of their existing jurisdiction over such actions.⁵⁷

D. CONFERRING JURISDICTION BY CONSENT.⁵⁸—Where the subject-matter of the action is not within the jurisdiction of the justice, the consent of the parties cannot confer jurisdiction thereof.⁵⁹ The amount in controversy over which a justice of the peace is given jurisdiction,⁶⁰ cannot, in most states, be increased by the action of the parties,⁶¹ though in a few states the parties may, by their agreement, increase the amount over which a justice's court has jurisdiction to a sum which would otherwise not be within its jurisdiction.⁶² The territorial jurisdiction of a justice's court cannot be extended by the consent of a defendant:⁶³ nor can the parties by their consent give validity to the action of a justice of the peace in presiding over a court held beyond the limits of the territory over which his authority extends,⁶⁴

E. JURISDICTION AS DEPENDENT UPON ELECTION OF REMEDIES.—A party may waive a tort and recover upon the contract implied by the law,⁶⁷ though it is the rule under some cases that if a justice's court would have had no jurisdiction of the action arising from the wrongful act, it cannot acquire jurisdiction as a result of the act of the plaintiff in converting the action from a tort to a contract action;⁶⁸ and in some jurisdictions there can be no waiver of the tort where property converted has not been turned into money.⁶⁹ A right of action on contract may be waived and recovery sought in tort.⁷⁰ If the cause of action can be fairly treated as based either in tort or on contract, of one

[a] There is a distinction between a justice going beyond the territorial limits of his jurisdiction, and a non-resident defendant submitting to jurisdiction. "Whenever a court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of a suit, the defendant therein can waive the jurisdiction as to his person but if the court has neither jurisdiction of the subject-matter nor of the person, no waiver by the defendant can give the court jurisdiction. If in this case the magistrate had held his court within the limits of his jurisdiction and the defendant had resided outside of those limits and had gone before the magistrate and waived the jurisdiction as to his person, and the magistrate had entered up judgment against him, that judgment would have bound him. But when the magistrate went outside of the limits of his jurisdiction and undertook to hold his court, he neither had jurisdiction of the subject-matter nor of the person; and no waiver or agreement made before him outside of his jurisdiction could confer jurisdiction upon him. Outside of the limits of his district he was not a judge." Block v. Henderson, 82 Ga. 23, 8 S. E. 877, 14 Am. St. Rep. 138, 3 L. R. A. 325.

F. JURISDICTION AS DEPENDENT UPON NATURE OF SUBJECT-MATTER.

1. In General.—The subject-matter over which justices of the peace have jurisdiction has been gradually but constantly extended.⁷³ A grant of jurisdiction to justices "in all civil actions" is in terms sufficiently broad to comprehend all actions which are not criminal;⁷⁴ it includes special proceedings.⁷⁵ A constitutional grant of jurisdiction over all "causes," within a specified amount, authorizes the conferring of jurisdiction over tort as well as contract actions.⁷⁶

2. Actions Ex Contractu.—a. In General.—The jurisdiction of justices of the peace commonly extends over contract actions, within the amount specified in the particular statute or constitution conferring the jurisdiction.⁷⁷ Where jurisdiction is given over all civil ac-

[a] Extension Is Favored.—"Furthermore, the jurisdiction of these lower courts, near to the people and inexpensive, is to be favored. In them, matters in difference are settled in the neighborhood by magistrates who know the parties, and without the expense of attending many days at the perhaps distant county seat, with heavy bills of costs and the necessity of employing and paying counsel." *Malloy v. ing the matter. Whenever title to or possession of real property is a material fact in the case, upon which the plaintiff relies for a recovery or the defendant for a defense, such matter is properly considered as "involved" in the action;⁴⁴ it is not necessary that an issue in regard to the title be raised by the pleadings.⁴⁵ In some jurisdictions, however, unless title is directly in issue, the jurisdiction of the justice is not ousted;⁴⁶ where title or possession is a fact incidentally or collaterally brought into the action, it is not considered to be so involved or in issue as to oust the justice's court of jurisdiction.⁴⁷ In

[a] But such statutes are unconstitutional unless they limit the actions to those in which the value of the land involved is within the amount specified in the constitution as the maximum sum over which jurisdiction may extend. Webb v. Carlisle, Jones & Co., 65 Ala. 313. Amount in controversy or value of property as test of jurisdiction, see generally the title "Jurisdiction."

[a] "It is difficult to define with precision the word 'involve' as it is employed in that section. Its primary signification is to 'roll up or envelop' and it also means 'to comprise, to contain, to include by rational or logical construction,' but none of these express the precise idea, and its exact synonym may not be found in a single word. The idea intended to be embodied in the phrase, 'cases at law which involve the title or possession of real property' may be expressed by the paraphrase: 'cases at law in which the title or possession of real property is a material fact in the case, upon which the plaintiff relies for a recovery or the defendant for a defense.'"Holman v. Taylor, 31 Cal. 338, 339.

[b] "The phrases 'called in question,' and 'put in issue,' evidently are intended to have the same meaning and application, and that is, that justices' courts have no jurisdiction of an action in which the title to real property must necessarily be determined." Hammer v. Garrett, 15 Idaho 657, 663, 99 Pac. 124.

[c] Even if title be admitted to be in a third person, if plaintiff seeks to recover from defendant a portion of the purchase money received by him from such party, a justice's court has the peace has no jurisdiction;⁵³ and an action to enforce a mechanic's lien on real estate is prohibited.⁵⁴ But the fact that a judgment may be satisfied by execution against real property, in the absence of sufficient personal property, does not make the action a land controversy;⁵⁵ and attachment proceedings are not prohibited.⁵⁶ Actions to condemn land may be maintained,⁵⁷ as may actions to determine whether conveyances have been made fraudulently and with intent to defeat executions on judgments.⁵⁸

b. *Actions Based on Contracts To Purchase and Sell Real Property.*⁵⁹—A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to enforce a vendor's lien.⁶⁰ But an action by the vendor to recover the purchase money of land sold does not necessarily involve the title to the land so as to oust the court of jurisdiction,⁶¹ though where a failure of consideration is pleaded, due to a want of title in the vendor, the rule is otherwise.⁶² An action by a vendee to recover a part payment or deposit on account of a defect in the title involves title;⁶³ but title is not involved where the claim made in such an action is that defendant abandoned the contract by conveying the land to a third person,⁶⁴ or where recovery of the payment is sought after a rescission of the contract.⁶⁵ In an action to recover damages for failure to convey property, title is not necessarily involved;⁶⁶ and an action for damages merely for delay in executing a conveyance may be maintained,⁶⁷ as may an action for fraudulent misrepresentations inducing the purchase of land.⁶⁸ Where contracts to purchase land are merely incidentally involved in an action, a justice of the peace may exercise jurisdiction.⁶⁹

c. Actions on Covenants and Other Real Contracts.—An action for a breach of covenant of warranty of title involves the question of title, so as to prevent a justice from exercising jurisdiction,⁷⁰ though upon the status of ground rents as original or subrents was involved. Pa.—Campbell v. Gallagher, 2 Watts 135.

[a] "The words 'good title' import that the owner has the title, legal and equitable, to all the land, and the words 'defective title' mean that the party claiming to own has not the whole title, but some other person has title to a part or portion of the land. Now, as plaintiff could not recover if defendants had title to the property and could recover if they had not, it would seem that the title of real property was a material fact in the case and was directly involved." this proposition there are authorities to the contrary.⁷¹ Actions based on personal covenants relating to land may be maintained.⁷² In some jurisdictions the statutes expressly declare that no jurisdiction shall be exercised over real contracts,⁷³ in which case a cause of action based on a contract to purchase or sell real property cannot be prosecuted in a justice's court.⁷⁴ All contracts in which real property is mentioned or incidentally affected do not necessarily involve the real property so as to exclude the jurisdiction of a justice's court.⁷⁵

[a] Indorsee of Purchase Money Note May Sue.—“It is not perceived how the title to the land which was the consideration of the note can come in question. [a] Whether the contract in suit is a sale or lease is a question which does not involve title, but merely the status of the parties. Quertermous v. Hatfield, 54 Ark. 16, 14 S. W. 1096.

[b] Contract (1) by which defendant was authorized to enter and cut timber on plaintiff's land does not involve title so as to prevent a justice of the peace from trying an action to recover the balance due under the contract. Woodson v. Hubbard, 45 Mo. App. 359. And see Herrick v. Newell, 49 Minn. 198, 51 N. W. 819. [c] “A contract for the produce of land does not concern the realty. A man who sues another for a load of coal is not obliged to show his right to the land from which it was mined. A claim for the price of wheat cannot be defeated by setting up an outstanding title in a third person to the field where it grew. A person who has bargained with one in possession for a license to dig and carry away minerals cannot, after enjoying the privilege, refuse to pay on the ground that

d. Actions for Rent or Value of Use.—Title is not so involved in an action to recover rent under a written lease as to prevent the justice from taking jurisdiction, since a tenant is estopped from denying his landlord's title.⁷⁶ The fact that defendant pleads that title and right to possession were in another, under whom he claims, does not alter the general rule,⁷⁷ though there are authorities which do not recognize this principle.⁷⁸ An answer denying the existence of the tenancy and the plaintiff's ownership of the land, does not of itself oust the court of jurisdiction, as plaintiff is entitled to recover if he proves that defendant is his tenant.⁷⁹ But if the action is for use and occupation and the issues or evidence present the question of title, no jurisdiction exists in the justice's court.⁸⁰ An action for mesne profits, after a recovery in ejectment, involves title to land within the rule.⁸¹

e. Possessory Actions.—Where a mere possessory right is involved, a justice of the peace has jurisdiction in many states.⁸² Thus, in most somebody else had a better right to the possession. In these cases the title to lands and tenements may not and cannot come in question." Rhoades v. Patrick, 27 Pa. 323.

jurisdictions, justices of the peace have power to try forcible entry and unlawful detainer actions,⁵³ on the theory that the right to possession and not the title is the sole question involved,⁵⁴ especially where that form of remedy is given a landlord against a tenant who wrongfully holds over after the expiration of his term,⁵⁵ or until it is made

54. N. Y.—Fredonia & S. Plank Road Co. v. Wait, 27 Barb. 214.

[a] Basis of This Rule.—"Undoubtedly, possession is a necessary ingredient in a complete title to land, for such title has several stages or degrees, viz. 1st. Mere possession or actual occupation, without pretence of right; 2d. The right of possession, which one man may have while another has the possession in fact; and 3d. The mere right of property which may exist without possession or the right of possession. (2 Black Comm. 195 to 199). These being united constitute what Blackstone calls a 'completely legal' title. (Id. 199). But the term 'title,' as used in the statute under consideration, does not embrace these different degrees or stages of right. It is limited to the right of possession; for where that is in question before a justice, he has no jurisdiction of the case; . . . In short, I understand the word 'title,' as used in the statute to mean precisely what it means in reference to the common law action of ejectment. It is synonymous with the right of possession." Ehle v. Quackenboss, 6 Hill (N. Y.), 537, 539.

[a] Statement of the Rule.—If the justice "can find and determine the right of possession without at the same time determining the rights of the parties, legal or equitable in the property itself, it cannot be said that the title is drawn in question. If, however, possession is held under and by virtue of some right in the property so that the right of possession cannot be determined without adjusting the right in the property itself, then the title to real estate is drawn in question within the meaning of the statute." Stone v. Blanchard, 87 Neb. 1, 126 N. W. 766.

[a] The basis for this rule is that, in these jurisdictions, justice's have jurisdiction over only contract actions and "an action of forcible entry and detainer in no sense of the term can be said to be a matter of contract. The idea of a contract, so far from entering into, or forming any part of the action, is expressly excluded by the form and substance of the action. The party's right to recover is based upon the ground of wrong and injury done to recover possession from a defaulting vendee,⁸⁹ or by a partner who has obtained a renewal lease from the landlord and claims to be entitled to sole possession.⁹⁰

Special actions given to a landlord for the recovery of possession against a tenant unlawfully holding over are triable in justice's court under some statutes.⁹¹ But jurisdiction over actions in the nature of ejectment cannot be given by statutes designating them as actions of unlawful detainer.⁹²

[a] Limitations of Such Statutes.

(1) "The remedy by summary proceedings in ejectment given by the landlord and tenant act (Revisal, sec. 2001, et seq.), is not coextensive with the doctrine of estoppel arising where one enters and holds land under another, but is restricted to the cases expressly specified in the act, and where the relation between the parties is simply that of landlord and tenant; and when, on the trial of such a proceeding, it is made to appear that the relation existing is that of mortgagor and mortgagee, giving the right to an account, or vendor and vendee, requiring an adjustment of equities, a justice's court has no jurisdiction of such questions and the proceedings should be dismissed." Hauser v. Morrison, 146 N. C. 248, 59 S. E. 693. And see Parker v. Allen, 84 N. C. 466. (2) This rule has been applied in actions involving the relation of vendor and vendee (Hauser v. Morrison, 146 N. C. 248, 59 S. E. 693; McDonald v. Ingram, 124 N. C. 272, 32 S. E. 677; Boone v. Drake, 109 N. C. 79, 13 S. E. 724; Parker v. Allen, 84 N. C. 466), (3) mortgagor and mortgagee (McLaurin v. McIntyre, 167 N. C. 350, 83 S. E. 627; Smith v. Garriss, 131 N. C. 34, 42 S. E. 445; Forsythe v. Bullock, 74 N. C. 135), (4) as well as a claimant under a will. Wright v. Harris, 116 N. C. 460, 21 S. E. 693.

[b] Mere allegation of want of title in the plaintiff, made in defendant's answer does not oust the court of jurisdiction; proof must be introduced in support of such allegation. Hahn v. Guilford, 87 N. C. 172; Foster v. Penry, 77 N. C. 160.

[c] Intervention by a third person claiming title, is not permitted in such actions. Davis v. Davis, 83 N. C. 71.

92. Beck v. Glenn, 69 Ala. 121; Webb v. Carlisle, Jones & Co., 65 Ala. 313.

Actions by purchasers under execution,⁹³ or other judicial sales,⁹⁴ to recover possession necessarily involve the title to land, and a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction, unless it is specially conferred by statute, as is sometimes the case.⁹⁵

f. Actions Involving Boundaries, Division Fences and Party Walls. Actions involving boundaries are, by some statutes, expressly taken from the jurisdiction of justices of the peace,⁹⁶ though in the absence of such a statute a controversy concerning the true boundary line of property does not necessarily involve title to property.⁹⁷ Disputes concerning fences erected on the division line of property,⁹⁸ and party walls,⁹⁹ are usually held not to be within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.

g. *Actions for Injuries to Land.*¹—Actions for injuries to real property, based on the plaintiff's right to possession, may be maintained in a justice's court,² though upon this proposition there are

j. *Raising and Determining Whether Questions of Title Involved.*¹⁸

(I.) In General. — A plaintiff by alleging in his complaint that the title or right to possession of real property is involved, and setting forth the facts out of which the question arises, is entitled to invoke the jurisdiction of the higher court,¹⁹ and the defendant cannot oust the jurisdiction of that court by interposing an answer which admits the plaintiff's title,²⁰ though in some states, if the plaintiff's claim of title in an action instituted in a justice's court is admitted by the defendant, the trial may proceed before the justice of the peace.²¹ Ordinarily, the question of jurisdiction cannot be raised by demurrer,²² but if the complaint discloses on its face that it is necessary for the justice's court to receive evidence as to title or determine the question of title, a want of jurisdiction is apparent and a demurrer should be interposed and sustained.²³ If no claim of title is made in the

[a] Jurisdiction is sometimes determined solely from the allegations of the declaration and if from that it does not appear that title is necessarily involved, the justice of the peace has jurisdiction even though a plea and the evidence brings title in question. Heath v. Robinson, 75 Vt. 133, 53 Atl. 995; French v. Holt, 57 Vt. 187; Flannery v. Hinkson, 40 Vt. 485; *Jake-way v. 20. Brown v. Southerland, 142 N. C. 225, 55 S. E. 108.

[a] "It is clear that the complaint alleges a state of facts which, if true, involves the title to land. Defendants, by moving to dismiss on the pleadings, cannot oust the jurisdiction, provided the complaint sets forth facts which present a case in which the title to real estate is in controversy. The fact, if it be conceded, that the answer admits the plaintiff's right to recover, cannot affect the question of jurisdiction." Brown v. Southerland, 142 N. C. 225, 55 S. E. 108.

21. Maynard v. Reynolds, 137 Mich. 42, 100 N. W. 174. See Ostrom v. Potter, 71 Mich. 44, 38 N. W. 670.

[a] What Constitutes a Claim of Title.—(1) A claim set up in plaintiff's declaration which can be proved by possession is not a claim of title. Maynard v. Reynolds, 137 Mich. 42, 100 N. W. 174; Ehle v. Quackenboss, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 537. (2) A claim of trespass on "the close of said plaintiff" is not a claim of title (Ostrom v. Potter, 71 Mich. 44, 38 N. W. 670), (3) nor does an allegation that defendant broke and entered "the lands and premises of the said plaintiff" (Orris v. Kempton, 105 Mich. 229, 63 N. W. 68), (4) or that plaintiff cut down and carried off trees standing "on the land of the said plaintiff" constitute a claim of title. Maynard v. Reynolds, 137 Mich. 42, 100 N. W. 174.

[a] "If the party will entitle himself to a dismissal, he must call the justice's attention specifically to the objection by at least disputing the title claimed. If he omit this, it is a waiver and a virtual assent that the evidence of title shall be received, and that the title as made out shall pass without being drawn into dispute. . . .

An amendment to the complaint changing the cause of action from one involving title to real estate to one in which title is not involved cannot be allowed either in the justice's court,²⁹ or on appeal.³⁰

(II.) Form and Sufficiency of Answer.³¹ — The answer must be in writing,³² and must state facts showing affirmatively that title to real property is involved;³³ the general allegation that defendant holds title is insufficient.³⁴ In many states the answer must be verified,³⁵

The statute is founded on the impropriety of a title to land being tried and determined by a justice's court. If it be conceded, or be assumed by both parties, thus passing without dispute on the trial, the plaintiff does not in the words of the statute show it to be in question. There is in fact no question about it; and the evil of trying title does not arise." Koon v. Mazuzan, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 44.

[a] "It should be remembered that a plea of title means some unequivocal assertion by defendant of title to the premises or some part thereof . . . and not a mere denial of the allegation of ownership. . . . A denial of an allegation of a complaint or petition is not a setting forth of facts; it simply challenges the truth of the allegation and puts the plaintiff or petitioner to his proofs, while the requirement of the law is that there shall be an affirmative issue; a declaration of facts which show that the defendant claims title to the real property." *People ex rel. effect that title was not involved renders the judgment voidable for error, but not void for want of jurisdiction.⁵⁰ Error on the part of the justice of the peace in determining that title to real property was involved does not affect the jurisdiction of the higher court;⁵¹ nor does a finding by the higher court adverse to the answer which raised the question of title.⁵²

On appeal, the nature of the evidence cannot be considered in determining the question of jurisdiction of the justice's court,⁵³ and if, under the issues made by the pleadings, evidence of title may or may not have been given at the trial, and the record is silent on the matter, it will be presumed that no such evidence was offered.⁵⁴ The fact that, on the appeal, the trial being de novo, title does come in question is immaterial, where it was not involved in the justice's court.⁵⁵ Costs are sometimes made to depend, where judgment has been in favor of the defendant, upon the issuing of a certificate that title to real property came in question on the trial.⁵⁶

k. Waiver of Objection of Want of Jurisdiction.—Jurisdiction over an action involving title to real property cannot be conferred by consent.⁵⁷ Failure on the part of the defendant to file a verified answer from which it would appear that the title to real property was involved in the action is not always a waiver of the objection.⁵⁸

Those matters come in question upon the trial that are alleged in the complaint, controverted by the answer, and which the plaintiff gives evidence of to maintain his cause of action. The fact that the plaintiff gives insufficient evidence to maintain his complaint, and that thus the defendant is relieved from the necessity of giving any evidence to contradict that given by the plaintiff, does not change the situation and remove those matters which have been pleaded and evidence of given, from the category of matters that came in question upon the trial." *Taylor v. 5. Actions Involving Taxes, Assessments and Licenses.—Actions to recover taxes or assessments, the amount involved being within the court's jurisdiction, may usually be instituted in justice's courts.⁵⁹ But, where it appears on the face of the record that the determination of the action would necessarily involve the validity of the tax or assessment, the justice can proceed no further with the action,⁶⁰ and a justice has no jurisdiction over actions in which the enforcement of the tax lien by the sale of the property for the unpaid taxes is a part of the relief sought.⁶¹ This latter rule is applicable in actions to collect and enforce special assessments.⁶²

[a] Rule Stated.—"A justice of the peace court is not a chancery court. The justice may apply equitable doctrines to the solution of questions in cases properly coming within his jurisdiction, but, he does not possess the machinery and appliances of a court of equity, and cannot administer the flexible remedies of that court. . . . These courts were not designed for complicated matters. They have been aptly called the people's courts, and the object of their organization was to afford to every one a convenient, expeditious and cheap method for the settlement of the small, everyday affairs of life. It was the design that these tribunals should be presided over by worthy and practical men, versed in ordinary business matters, but not learned in the law; and, in keeping with this design, no equitable powers have been conferred upon them." Whitesides v. Kershaw, 44 Ark. 377.

[b] Basis of this principle is to be found in the statutes abolishing the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity and establishing but one form of action: "No good reason is perceived why these provisions should not be held applicable to actions before justices of the peace where they have jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action. . . . It was the evident design of the code to abolish, in practice, all distinction between law and equity, and to invest every court having jurisdiction of a civil action with a power to hear and determine the same in accordance with equitable as well as legal principles." Snell v. Mohan, 38 Ind. 494.

[c] Extent of Their Power.—"It must be admitted that a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to declare an equity or to enforce an equitable lien, while on the other hand it seems to us that it must be admitted that a justice of the peace has the jurisdiction to enforce the collection of money which equitably belongs to a party. The distinction between the two is clear to our minds." Markham v. McCown, 124 N. C. 163, 166, 32 S. E. 494.

[d] Statutes conferring such power are not to be construed as giving to justices of the peace any jurisdiction over equitable remedies. State v. Covington, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 51; Putnam v. Bentley, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 84; Bryan v. Buckholder, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 561.

[e] Estoppel in pais (1) is not strictly equitable in nature and may be the basis of an action in a justice's court. Pitman v. Sixteen to One Min. Co., 78 Mo. App. 438, overruling Kelchner v. Morris, 75 Mo. App. 588; Sandige v. Hill, 70 Mo. App. 71, and other cases. See also Kansas City Star Pub. Co. v. Standard Warehouse Co., 123 Mo. App. 13, 99 S. W. 765. (2) Such an estoppel "had its origin in equity principles and it doubtless is most frequently termed an equitable estoppel. But it has become incorporated into the common law and applied in actions at law. . . . It is never necessary to go into a court of equity jurisdiction for the purpose of obtaining the benefit of an equitable estoppel when the case is not otherwise of equitable jurisdiction." *Pitman v. [a] Covenant to renew a lease (1) may be set up as a defense to an action for possession (Barbee v. Greenberg, 144 N. C. 430, 57 S. E. 125), for (2) while such a provision "is not itself a renewal so as to vest an estate in the defendants for the successive term, it gave them an equity, which, while it cannot be specifically enforced in the court of a justice, will be recognized as a defense to a proceeding for the ejectment of the defendants." McAdoo v. Callum, 86 N. C. 419.

3. Executors, Administrators, etc.—Jurisdiction of justice's courts extends to actions by or against the personal representatives of deceased persons,¹¹ though a few earlier authorities are to be found, based on special statutory limitations, denying the jurisdiction of justice's courts over action against them.¹² An action against the heirs of a decedent on his contracts may be maintained before a justice of the peace.¹³

4. Married Women.—Actions may usually be maintained against married women,¹⁴ though in states where the power of a married woman to contract without her husband's consent is greatly limited, a justice's court has been held to have no such jurisdiction,¹⁵ except on liabilities incurred while they were unmarried or on their obligations as sole traders,¹⁶ or on their contracts for necessities.¹⁷

I. AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY AS A TEST OF JURISDICTION.—One of the most common measures adopted to limit the jurisdiction of justice's courts is that by which the amount in controversy or the value of the property involved is the determining factor. The limit beyond which they have no jurisdiction varies in the different states, and no general rules applicable in this particular can be laid down. The subject has, however, been fully treated elsewhere in this work.¹⁸

J. TERRITORIAL JURISDICTION. — The territorial jurisdiction of justices of the peace is discussed elsewhere in this article.¹⁹

K. ANCILLARY JURISDICTION. — The determination of matters arising merely incidentally in the main action is properly within the jurisdiction of a justice's court.²⁰ It cannot, however, upon the theory that a matter is incidental to a subject over which it has jurisdiction, draw to itself an unwarranted jurisdiction.²¹ A justice's court, operating under a constitutional grant of power, cannot be deprived of power to act by any failure of the legislature to enact laws governing its practice and procedure.²² It has power to enforce its orders by punishment for contempt.²³ It cannot, however, in the absence of a statute, appoint an elisor to act as constable where the regular officer is disqualified.²⁴

[a] Basis of the Rule.—"The justice's court, under our form of government, is a constitutional tribunal and clothed with exclusive original jurisdiction for certain purposes. It is a universal rule of construction that the grant of a principal power, ipso facto, includes all minor, subsidiary powers incidental to the exercise of the main power. The legislature possesses no power, either by acts of commission or omission, to alter or destroy the separate and independent constitutional jurisdiction of our respective courts. The constitution, in ordaining this department of the government, and in defining and specifying their peculiar powers and duties, contemplated that the legislature would pass the necessary laws for their complete organization. Their failure to do so certainly does not render inoperative or void the inherent and indispensable attributes that all these courts possess as matters of constitutional right and legal duty. . . . If these principles be undeniable, the justice's court was fully competent to make its own rules and regulations to carry into effect its original constitutional jurisdiction." More v. Woodruff, 3 Ark. 214, 215, adoption of summons as original process held valid.

which will operate to disqualify a justice of the peace from trying an action does not exclude other and common-law disqualifications.²⁵

2. By Interest in, or Connection With the Action.—Interest of a justice of the peace in the subject-matter of the action or proceeding is everywhere treated as a disqualification.²⁶ Actions by or against the township or district in which he resides sometimes serves to disqualify him.²⁷ But a general interest in common with other citizens and taxpayers in fines collected and penalties adjudged does not disqualify a justice.²⁸ A justice of the peace who is employed by one

Employment of the justice by the plaintiff as a collecting agent for the matter which is the basis of the action renders the justice incompetent to act,³¹ though if such employment be only casual and formal no disqualification is worked.³² Business connections with an attorney in the case may also disqualify a justice of the peace.³³

3. By Relationship to Parties.—Relationship of the justice to either of the parties, by consanguinity or affinity, within degrees which vary considerably in different states, operates to disqualify him from trying the action.³⁴ The rule applies to relationship to a party

But in this case the justice not only tried the cause, ruled on questions of law and the admission of evidence, decided the case and made the judgment, but he took the minutes of testimony and made the return. . . . 4. Effect.—Purely ministerial acts may be performed by a justice of the peace who for any reason is disqualified from presiding over the action.³⁷ Judicial action by a disqualified justice is, by some courts held to be void,³⁸ by others, only voidable.³⁹

A justice of the peace who is disqualified should, of his own motion, refuse to proceed with the case.⁴⁰

[a] What Constitutes Relationship by Affinity.—"A husband is related by affinity to the blood relations of his wife, and the wife by affinity to the blood relations of her husband, but not otherwise by affinity. Thus, two persons who are not otherwise related may marry two sisters, and these persons would not be related by affinity to each other. . . . In the present case the justice was not related in any respect to the party and hence was competent to preside in the case. The party having married a cousin of the justice's wife was not thereby brought within any of the degrees of consanguinity or affinity. Had the party married the justice's cousin, or the justice married the party's cousin, he would have been disqualified." Blacklock v. Waldrup, 84 Ga. 145, 10 S. E. 622, 20 Am. St. Rep. 350. of office,⁴⁷ unless, by statute, they are expressly continued as to causes then pending before him,⁴⁸ though mere ministerial acts in connection with the cases he has tried may be performed.⁴⁹

2. Powers of Successor in Office.—The successor in office of a justice of the peace has power to correct errors and mistakes in the papers and proceedings in actions tried by his predecessor;⁵⁰ and he has general powers over judgments rendered by his predecessor,⁵¹ but he cannot revise the action of his predecessor or re-examine a case on its merits.⁵² In the absence of a statute granting the power, an action pending before a justice of the peace at the time of his retirement from office is not transferred to his successor;⁵³ but in most states statutes now provide that in case of the death, removal, resignation or termination of office of a justice of the peace, his successor in office,⁵⁴ or some other specified justice, may complete the unfinished business pending in his court.⁵⁵

disposed of.⁵⁷ The fact that a portion of the relief sought is not within the power of a justice to grant does not deprive him of the jurisdiction which does exist.⁵⁸ The calling and impaneling of a jury, when authorized, to try an issue of fact does not oust the jurisdiction of a justice;⁵⁹ but delay in taking further proceedings, after a jury has disagreed, will have that effect.⁶⁰ The general rule is that failure to render and enter judgment within the time required by statute is fatal to the jurisdiction of the court in the particular cause before it.⁶¹

2. By Acts of Parties.—Various acts of the parties may work a discontinuance of the action in a justice's court.⁶² Thus, while a justice of the peace must wait a reasonable time after that set for the trial of a cause for the plaintiff to appear,⁶³ if the plaintiff does not jurisdiction of an action by continuing it to a fixed future hour or date.⁷⁰ Continuances from day to day necessitated by the length of a trial or the condition of the calendar of the court,⁷¹ and short adjournments during the day,⁷² do not affect the jurisdiction of the court. But a continuance of an action to an uncertain date in the future operates to divest a justice of jurisdiction,⁷³ though upon this proposition there are authorities to the contrary,⁷⁴ at least where both the parties have consented to the action of the court.⁷⁵ On the termination of the trial, a case cannot be taken under advisement for an indefinite time, and a decision reserved; the justice loses jurisdiction in such case;⁷⁶ but there are authorities to the contrary.⁷⁷

impropriety of or defects in proceedings taken by himself to obtain a hearing before a justice of the peace other than the one who would regularly have presided over the action.⁹² If a particular mode of waiving the disqualification is provided by statute this method is exclusive of all others.⁹³

4. As to Improper Continuances.⁹⁴—The discontinuance effected by the absence of a justice is a matter which may be waived, as it is regarded as pertaining to the jurisdiction of the court over the person of the defendant.⁹⁵

P. PROCEDURE TO RAISE AND DETERMINE JURISDICTIONAL QUESTIONS.⁹⁶—It is the duty of the court of its own motion to dismiss a cause whenever it is made to appear that it has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter.⁹⁷ If the question of jurisdiction depends upon the existence of controverted facts a justice of the peace has jurisdiction to hear the evidence for the purpose of determining whether he has jurisdiction to try and decide the case on its merits.⁹⁸ Want of jurisdiction may be urged, in some states, by a motion to dismiss the universally¹⁸ regarded as immaterial, and indeed, some statutes have expressly stated that forms of action shall not apply to the justice's court and that there shall be but one form of action in such court called a civil action.¹⁹

C. CONSOLIDATION OF ACTIONS.²⁰—In the absence of statute, a plaintiff cannot be required to consolidate his actions on several demands,²¹ but it is not erroneous to hear several cases at one time where witnesses are examined in each, and separate judgments are rendered.²² Some statutes, however, require a plaintiff to consolidate his demands,²³ which are of a nature to be consolidated,²⁴ if when consolidated they do not exceed the jurisdiction of the court,²⁵ and sometimes provide that if he refuse or neglect to do so, he will be forever barred from suing therefor.²⁶

In limited and special classes of actions a more extended jurisdiction is sometimes conferred upon them,³⁸ and some statutes give justices jurisdiction for certain purposes co-extensive with the state.³⁹ In some instances their jurisdiction extends over the district adjoining that in which their court is held,⁴⁰ and it is not uncommon for justices in cities to have jurisdiction co-extensive with the boundaries of the city, notwithstanding this territory is larger than the district or precinct from which they were elected,⁴¹ and for city justices of the peace to have jurisdiction over the entire county of which the city forms a part,⁴² although justices of the peace, resident in cities, are sometimes deprived of jurisdiction where higher courts have been created.⁴³ On the other hand, justices

[a] Justice in a city can be given no jurisdiction of a portion of a district without the city, where the constitution provides that justices of the peace shall be elected by districts. Heggie v. Stone, 70 Miss. 39, 12 So. 253.

outside the city are sometimes given jurisdiction within the city,⁴⁴ but sometimes county justices are denied jurisdiction over such portions of the county as are within the jurisdiction of a city justice.⁴⁵

A statute imposing or granting duties or powers upon a justice of the peace, in general terms, will be construed as not enlarging their territorial jurisdiction unless a more extensive jurisdiction is given by express language.⁴⁶ And the fact that, under special statutory provisions, process of a justice's court may be served outside of the district over which he is given jurisdiction does not operate to extend his jurisdiction.⁴⁷ Nor does a general provision defining and limiting the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in amount, operate to confer jurisdiction generally from a territorial standpoint.⁴⁸

These statutes require that the justice exercise his functions in the district over which he has jurisdiction,⁴⁹ unless under statute he attends and acts in another justice's court during the absence or disability of its justice.⁵⁰

If the justice acts while outside his own district the entire proceedings are void,⁵¹ even if the parties consent thereto,⁵² although it has been held that while outside of his township he may issue summonses returnable to his township.⁵³ So also if he issues his process to a district other than his own, when not authorized by statute, he does

St. 506. Ore.—Taylor v. Jenkins, 11 Ore. 274, 3 Pac. 681.

[a] The actual residences of the plaintiff and defendant are of no importance under this statute. Dale v. Prentice, 126 App. Div. 137, 110 N. Y. Supp. 535.

[b] The personal presence of the plaintiff or the defendant at the time of taking out of the summons is not essential under statute providing in substance that actions in a justice's court where the plaintiffs are all non-residents of the county, or the de-

ant is found or has property,⁶⁴ but some statutes except from the jurisdiction of justices actions to recover money of actual residents of other counties, with certain exceptions.⁶⁵

Under some statutes, actions may be brought where the cause of action accrued or arose,⁶⁶ if in tort, where the tort was committed,⁶⁷ or if upon contract where the debt was contracted,⁶⁸ or where the contract was to be performed;⁶⁹ and this sometimes, and perhaps genferend is a nonresident of the county may be brought before any justice of the township or city where such plaintiffs or defendant or either of them may be. Weaver v. Rix, 109 Mich. 697, 67 N. W. 970. See also Hunter v. Burtis, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 358.

[c] This provision in the New York code is permissive, not compulsory. Slavin v. Mansfield, 77 Hun 535, 28 N. Y. Supp. 921.

[d] On oath that the defendant has gone from the county of his residence to evade service, he may be sued in any county where found in Alabama. Read v. Coker, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 22.

[a] Basis of the Rule.—"It may be admitted that the locus of the forum of a justice of the peace is the township of his residence, and the place of his residence or office within the township. But this is not a matter affecting or limiting his jurisdiction to try and determine actions. It is rather a provision directing the manner of the exercise of jurisdiction, and we know of no reason why the parties may not, for their own convenience and the convenience of the witnesses, or for any other cause which may move them thereto, stipulate that the trial may be had at some place other than the residence or office of the justice. If that place should be over the township line, we cannot see why the stipulation should be held illegal and the proceedings void." Rogers v. Loop, 51 Iowa 41, 50 N. W. 224. Compare McDonald v. Farmers' Supply Co., 143 Ga. 552, 85 S. E. 861.

or asking for or acquiescing in a continuance,⁸⁴ is a waiver. Interposing an answer to the merits, after a plea of want of jurisdiction has been overruled, is regarded as a waiver in some states,⁸⁵ except where the objection may be urged at the trial.⁸⁶ Failure to appear in the action and object is not a waiver, however, where the record fails to show jurisdiction.⁸⁷

b. Change of Place of Trial. — (I.) Change of Venue.⁸⁸ — (A.) IN GENERAL. — Statutes generally provide for a change of venue in actions before justices of the peace.⁸⁹ But this right is purely statutory; it does not exist except where allowed by statute.⁹⁰ And from the nature of the right, it follows also that to obtain a change of venue the parties must strictly comply with the statute.⁹¹ Although the facts authorizing a change of venue may exist the parties may properly go to trial without applying for a change,⁹² and thereby waive the right.⁹³

A garnishee may secure a change of venue, as to the garnishment proceedings, without affecting the jurisdiction of the justice, in the

(G.) SUBSEQUENT CHANGE.—In the absence of an express statute,⁴⁷ the right to a subsequent change of venue is sometimes allowed,⁴⁸ and sometimes denied.⁴⁹ But even if it be erroneous, the defendant cannot complain that he himself procured two changes.⁵⁰

(H.) IRREGULARITIES, THEIR EFFECT AND WAIVER.—It is reversible error for a justice to proceed with the trial after the filing of the proper affidavit and giving of notice of motion,⁵¹ and the judgment is,⁵² or is not,⁵³ void, depending on whether the rule in the particular jurisdic-

Other Party.—The fact that the defendant has applied for a change, which has been granted, will not preclude the plaintiff from procuring a subsequent change where good cause is shown. Herbert v. Beathard, 26 Kan. 746.

[a] Privilege of Being Sued in Proper County.—The continuance of a case by consent after a party has pleaded his privilege of being sued in the county of his residence will not operate as a waiver of the plea. Jennings v. Shiner (Tex. Civ. App.), 43 S. W. 276.

tion is that the filing of the affidavit divests the justice of jurisdiction.⁵⁴ Any and all irregularities in the granting of the change of venue are waived by the appearance and participation of the parties in the trial without objection,⁵⁵ but a voluntary appearance will not confer jurisdiction if the justice has not jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action.⁵⁶ If the case is not transferred to the justice named in the statute, and the parties do not submit to jurisdiction, the justice to whom the cause is transferred is without jurisdiction,⁵⁷ but it is otherwise if they appear and go to trial,⁵⁸ or otherwise consent.⁵⁹

(II.) Transfer of Cause. — The transfer of the cause to a superior court because of lack of jurisdiction over the subject-matter, and other transfers not amounting to change of venue, are treated in a subsequent section.⁶⁰

62. Cal.—Allison v. Thomas, 72 Cal. 562, 14 Pac. 309, 1 Am. St. Rep. 89, holding that the omission of the initial letter of the middle name of a party to an action in a justice's court is a matter of no consequence and does not in any way affect the validity of the proceedings. Ga.—Dorsey v. Black, 55 Ga. 315. III.—Newton v. People, 72 Ill. 507, holding that an information for the recovery of a fine need not be in the name of the people. [a] Title of Suit in Firm Name. The fact that the title to a suit before a justice of the peace is stated in the firm name instead of the individual names of the partners is not such error as to warrant a dismissal of the suit. It may be amended at any time before final judgment. Rohrbough, Moore & Co. v. Reed Bros., 57 Mo. 292.

[b] Justice May Reject Plea of Misnomer.—Unless the plea offered will enable the magistrate to decide the case according to the law and right of the matter he may reject it. Hall v. Washington, 4 Cranch C. C. 722, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 5,953.

63. Rohrbough, Moore & Co. v. Reed Bros., 57 Mo. 292.

[a] Substituting Officers of Corporation.—In an action in the name of the treasurer of an association it is proper on appeal from the justice to amend by substituting the trustees of the association as plaintiff so as to conform to the act of incorporation. Comfort v. Leland, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 81; Giffen v. St. Clair Tp., 4 Watts & S. (Pa.) 327.

[b] A variation in a declaration, from the summons, in stating the name of the defendant is not a jurisdictional defect and may be amended, and when it is not amended, the amendment will be treated as made after judgment rendered in the case. Bole v. Sands & Maxwell Lumb. Co., 77 Mich. 239, 43 N. W. 873; Bockheim v. Linn; How. N. P. (Mich.) 261 (holding that where the summons was in the name of the firm and the declaration was against the defendant that a motion to amend by inserting the name of one of the partners was properly allowed); Haskins v. Citizens' Bank, 12 Neb. 39, 10 N. W. 466.

[c] Statute allows inserting the name of partners in an action commenced in the partnership name. Knowles & Son v. Cavanaugh, 144 Mich. 260, 107 N. W. 1073.

[d] Addition of Name of Creditor in Substituted Account.—Where an account in proper form is filed before a justice of the peace as the foundation of an action and is lost, and a substituted account is filed which omits the name of the creditor, the plaintiff should be allowed to amend at any time either before trial, after judgment, or after appeal to the circuit court. Martin v. McClellan, 30 Ark. 405.

64. Sherrod v. Shirley, 57 Ind. 13.

66. See cases in preceding note.

2. Change and Substitution of Parties.—A justice of the peace may permit amendments to the parties to the extent of discontinuing as to any joint plaintiff,⁶⁷ and perhaps a joint defendant,⁶⁸ so long as any one or more of the original plaintiffs and defendants remain parties, but he cannot permit an amendment which changes entirely the parties plaintiff or defendant and substitutes new parties,⁶⁹ especially where such change would in effect introduce a new cause of action,⁷⁰ unless the adverse party consents,⁷¹ or it is authorized by statute.⁷² An amendment to join a joint contractor may be allowed.⁷³ The right of a party sued in a justice court, to interplead adverse claimants, is sometimes recognized.⁷⁴ In some jurisdictions the code provides for the revival of actions before justices of the peace upon the death of one of the parties.⁷⁵

3. Objections.—The objection for misnomer or other defects as to parties to a justice suit should be taken by plea in abatement,⁷⁶

67. Douglas v. Newman, 5 Ill. App. 518; Lapham v. Rice, 55 N. Y. 472; Ackley v. Tarbox, 31 N. Y. 564, the amendment in this case consisted in striking out the name of a nominal plaintiff. But see Gates v. Ward, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 424.

As to amendments, see infra, III, K, 8, and the titles "Amendments and Joefails;" "New Cause of Action or Defense;" "Parties."

F. PROCESS AND SERVICE THEREOF.—1. In General.⁸¹—The process by which actions before justices of the peace may be commenced is either a summons,⁸² or under some statutes an attachment.⁸³ The ordinary process of the justice's court is a summons,⁸⁴ which has for its object the bringing of the parties into court,⁸⁵ and generally the commencing of the action,⁸⁶ although in some jurisdictions the

[a] Statute Is Permissive.—(1) Either a long or a short summons may be issued against a nonresident. Moore v. Vrooman, 32 Mich. 526. (2) Although the word “shall” is used in the Pennsylvania statute, it will be construed as if it used the word “may.” Benighouse v. Felt, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. 496. See also Meany & Co. v. Cannon, 11 Pa. Dist. 25.

[b] The short summons need not show that the defendant is a nonresident. Stoll v. Padley, 98 Mich. 13, 56 N. W. 1042.

[c] The presumption from the issuance of a long summons is that the defendant is a resident of the county in which the justice resides. Segar v. Muskegon Shingle & Lumb. Co., 81 Mich. 344, 347, 45 N. W. 982. See also Henika v. Brown, 155 Mich. 559, 119 N. W. 1083; Courtis v. Garrison, 148 Mich. 226, 111 N. W. 770.

[a] A writ filled up by a constable is void and will be dismissed on motion. This would be true even though the constable acted at the request of the plaintiff's attorney and in his presence and under his control. Winchell v. Pond, 19 Vt. 198. This case was decided, however, under a statute which expressly prohibited sheriffs or deputy sheriffs from making writs.

[b] A summons issued with a blank as to the return day is absolutely void and its service and return after the blank is filled by another person confers no jurisdiction. Craighead v. Martin, 25 Minn. 41.

[c] A blank left in the copy of a summons will not invalidate the service. Martin v. Lindstrom, 73 Minn. 121, 75 N. W. 1038.

[e] An appointment upon a separate and distinct paper (1) is not a compliance with the statute (Gordon v. Knapp, 2 Ill. 488), (2) unless securely fastened to the back of the writ. Lewis v. Smith, 45 Colo. 557, 101 Pac. 762.

[f] A deputation signed in blank and afterwards filled up by a third person without the knowledge or direction of the justice is void. Carr v. Tyler, 28 Vt. 783.

[g] The full name of the appointee must be indorsed. Allison v. Hampton, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 71.

[h] Form of Deputation. — (1) "State of N——, to J. H., of said county, specially deputized to serve these papers, Greeting," appearing on the face of the summons is a sufficient deputation under a statute requiring a deputation to be "in writing on the process." Haskins v. Citizens Bank, 12 Neb. 39, 10 N. W. 466. (2) An indorsement signed by the justice is sufficient, which recites that "the constable of said district being unable to act herein, and it appearing that the within process will not be served for want of an officer, I hereby appoint H. C. W. to make service of the within summons." North Pacific Cycle Co. v. Thomas, 26 Ore. 381, 38 Pac. 307, 46 Am. St. Rep. 636.

[i] The writ should not be directed to the person appointed but his authority should be endorsed thereon. Murdock v. Phillips, 65 Wis. 622, 28 N. W. 66.

[j] A person appointed to execute process is possessed of all the powers and authority and subject to the same obligations as a constable in relation to the writ directed to him. Houck v. Swartz, 25 Mo. App. 17.

[k] Decision of Justice Conclusive as to When Emergency Arises.—Under a statute providing that in "extraordinary cases" a justice may appoint any one not a party to execute process, the decision of the justice as to when such cases arise is conclusive. *State v. If the defendant is a corporation, service must be made on the officer or agent designated in the statute.⁶⁶

f. *Privilege From Service.*⁶⁷ — Generally a party is privileged from the service of legal process in civil actions while in good faith he is in attendance either as a party or witness upon the hearing of a cause in court. This privilege exists during the time fairly occupied in going to and returning from the place of trial as well as during the time the party is in actual attendance, hence service of a summons on a non-resident while so attending a trial in a court is void and will be set aside on motion,⁶⁸ unless the party or witness by his conduct is deemed to have waived his privilege.⁶⁹

[c] Aiding Return by Justice's Docket.—If the return fails to show sufficient service, an entry in the docket of the justice that "the summons was duly served" cannot be relied upon to give validity to the judgment. Lowe v. Alexander, 15 Cal. 296.

[d] Illustrations.—(1) A return "duly served" is not sufficient to give the justice jurisdiction. Zane v. Pisant, 2 N. J. L. 319; Budd v. Marvin, 4 N. J. L. 248. (2) A return "served the thirtieth day of January" is insufficient. Layton v. Cooper, 2 N. J. L. 62. (3) A return "served for the above date by copy" is defective. Pedrick v. Shaw, 2 N. J. L. 57; Foster v. Hazen, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 547, although it is not a jurisdictional defect. (4) A return "served on defendant" is insufficient. Hedden v. Van Ness, 2 N. J. L. 84.

[e] Where the statute requires the leaving a copy of the summons with the defendant as well as reading it to him the return must show a compliance with both requirements of the statute to be sufficient. Wilkinson v. Bayley, 71 Wis. 131, 36 N. W. 836. See also Matteson v. Smith, 37 Wis. 333.

[f] The place where service was made need not be stated as it is presumed to have been in the county. Any fact as to residence depriving the justice of jurisdiction must be established by the defendant. Gulf & S. I. R. Co. v. Ramsey, 98 Miss. 863, 54 So. 440;

Beach v. Baker, 25 App. Div. 9, 48 N. Y. Supp. 1042.

[g] That either party is a resident of the county in which the action is brought need not be stated. Syracuse Moulding Co. v. Squires, 61 Hun 48, 15 N. Y. Supp. 321, 21 Civ. Proc. 58, 39 N. Y. St. 824.

[h] Form.—"This notice came into my hands on May 20th, 1882, and I certify that I personally served the same on the within-named Mary Little by reading the same to her, and delivering to her a true copy of the same, in Monroe township, Linn county, Iowa, on May 19th, 1882." [Signed.] Little v. Devendorf, 109 Iowa 47, 79 N. W. 476.

[i] Where service is made on a corporation the return must (1) set out the method of making service sufficiently to show that personal service was made up the proper agent or officer. Hoffman v. Alabama D. & F. Co., 124 Ala. 542, 27 So. 485; Independent Pub. Co. v. American Press Assn., 102 Ala. 475, 15 So. 947; Oxanna Bldg. Assn. v. Agee, 99 Ala. 571, 13 So. 279; Manhattan F. Ins. Co. v. Fowler & Co., 76 Ala. 372; Behan v. Phelps, 27 Misc. 718, 59 N. Y. Supp. 713. (2) The name of the officer or agent served should be stated. Singer v. Singer Mfg. Co., 2 Pa. Co. Ct. 578. See generally the title "Corporations."

[j] In a garnishment proceeding, the return must show notice of garnishment in writing as required by statute. Mosher v. Banking House, 6 Mo. App. 599.

75. Sevitsky v. Clifford, 28 Pa. Co. Ct. 445. See Fleming v. Nunn, 61 Miss. 603, holding the justice may construe a return as imparting personal service where the return itself is equivocal.

and facts showing compliance with the statute regulating such service.⁷⁴

If the officer fails to serve the summons, he is sometimes required to make a written return showing such fact and the reasons therefor.⁷⁵

Signature and Verification.—The officer making service of the process should sign the return,⁸⁰ and in some jurisdictions verify it.⁸¹

[a] Where a copy of the summons was left at the defendant's place of abode, the return must show (1) the abode to be that of the defendant. Polhemus v. Perkins, 15 N. J. L. 435. (2) An omission of the word "last" before the words "usual place of abode" does not vitiate the return. Vaule v. Miller, 64 Minn. 485, 67 N. W. 540. (3) And although better practice, it is not necessary to give the name of the person with whom the copy was left (Vaule v. Miller, 64 Minn. 485, 67 N. W. 540, following Robison v. Miller, 57 Miss. 237. See also Purnell v. McBreen, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 442), (4) but the return must show him to be an adult (Williams v. McDonald, 1 Just. L. Rep. But see Brown v. Knop, 137 Mich. 234, 100 N. W. 466, 101 N. W. 227; Fogg v. Child, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 246.

80. Ga.—Fitzgerald v. Adams, 9 Ga. 471. N. J.—Maires v. Smith, 16 N. J. L. 360, holding to be good a return signed "C. D." constable for "S. C." constable. Tex.—Foust v. Warren (Tex. Civ. App.), 72 S. W. 404.

[a] The signature to the return should show the official designation of the person serving the process, but where signed merely with the name of the officer the presumption will be that he was the proper officer. Foust v. Warren (Tex. Civ. App.), 72 S. W. 404.

[b] A signature by the deputy as such was upheld in Little v. Deventorf, 109 Iowa 47, 79 N. W. 476, as the justice undoubtedly satisfied himself that the deputy was acting as sheriff and that the return was intended to be in his name.

[c] The absence of a signature will not render the judgment in the case void on certiorari. Burton v. Creel, 122 Ark. 349, 183 S. W. 745.

81. Garey v. Redmond, 12 Pa. Dist. 580; Adler v. Patrick, 1 Chest. Co. (Pa.) 465.

[a] A mere certificate (1) by a person specially appointed to serve process is invalid. Pickard v. Marsh, 62 Ore. 192, 124 Pac. 268. (2) But he need not verify the return where the statute gives him the same powers as a constable and does not require the constable to verify. Betts v. Stevens, 6 Wis. 398. See also Winsor v. Goddard, 10 Kan. 625; Winsor v. Cole, 10 Kan. 620.

[b] Verification by officer unnecessary where not required by statute. Betts v. Stevens, 6 Wis. 398.

Determining Sufficiency.—The sufficiency of returns is determined by the justice⁸² whose judgments are not subject to collateral attack.⁸³

c. Conclusiveness.—A return of service of summons in an action before a justice's court showing a compliance with the statute,⁸⁴ is prima facie evidence of the facts therein recited.⁸⁵ The return may be impeached in a direct proceeding,⁸⁶ as in a proceeding to vacate the judgment where no rights of third parties have intervened,⁸⁷ and it may be impeached by the defendant appearing specially on return day and objecting to the jurisdiction of the court over him,⁸⁸ and in an action against the officer for false return.⁸⁹ But the authorities differ

[a] In determining their sufficiency, the justices will not scrutinize the returns with the technicality indulged in testing the returns of sheriffs and higher officers. Stegall v. American Pigment & C. Co., 150 Mo. App. 251, 130 S. W. 144.

[a] Where Return and Justice's Docket Differ.—Where the return shows "service by copy" it is presumed service was made at the defendant's place of abode notwithstanding the justice's docket states the summons was served by leaving a copy at the defendant's place of business. Sweeney v. Girolo, 154 Pa. 609, 26 Atl. 600.

[b] See Vigers v. Mooney, 3 N. J. L. 909, where the return showed service by "leaving a copy with defendant's wife" and on certiorari affidavits showing she did not live with the defendant were read as they did not contradict the record.

[a] Defendant's equivocal denial will not impeach return. Myers v. Hammond, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 61.

6 Alias Summonses. — Alias summonses may be issued when the original is returned without being served on any or all of the defendants.⁹² But a second summons cannot be lawfully issued after a dismissal of the action,⁹³ or where it is the duty of the justice to grant a pending motion to dismiss the action.⁹⁴

7. Objections and Waiver. — Although minor defects and irregularities in the process, its service and return will merely render the judgment voidable,⁹⁵ the defects may be such that the justice does not acquire jurisdiction over the person of the defendant in the absence of

[b] An appearance (1) in a motion to quash service (Whittier v. Woods, 57 Ore. 432, 112 Pac. 408), (2) or in a motion to dismiss for insufficient service (Downing v. W. J. Gow & Bros. Mortg. Inv. Co., 53 Kan. 246, 36 Pac. 335), is not a general appearance.

[c] Filing by mail a written motion to quash proceedings before a justice because the summons is not the one provided for a nonresident of the county, constitutes a special appearance. Nelson v. Hillen, 164 Mich. 507, 129 N. W. 717.

[d] An answer (1) for the purpose of raising the issue as to the justice's jurisdiction, which confines itself to facts relevant to that purpose, does not constitute a general appearance. Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. v. Heath's Admr., 87 Ky. 651, 9 S. W. 832; Ham-burger v. Baker, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 455. (2) But see Fairbanks & Co. v. Blum, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 479, 21 S. W. 1009, under a statute providing in substance that a defendant who files any de-fensive pleadings makes such an ap-pearance as gives the court jurisdiction over his person. Compare 2 STANDARD PROC. 492, 506, 510.

[e] An appearance after judgment by motion to set aside the judgment for want of service is not a general ap-pearance waiving defects in service, especially where there is no statute authorizing justices to set aside their judgments. Shaw v. Rowland, 32 Kan. 154, 4 Pac. 146.

[f] An appearance on appeal from a justice's court for the purpose of moving to set aside the judgment is not such an appearance as will cure want of service. Lutes v. Perkins, 6 Mo. 57.

[g] Giving Notice of Appeal Where Not Required.—Where defendant ap-pears specially for the purpose of ob-jecting to the jurisdiction of the court only and upon the motion being denied gives notice in open court that he will appeal, such notice not being a neces-sary step in perfecting an appeal he does not enter a general appearance thereby. Haney v. De Long (Okla.), 159 Pac. 468.

stitutes a general appearance.¹³ The arrest of the defendant on a warrant issued by a justice and the bringing of him before such justice does not constitute a voluntary appearance,¹⁴ unless he thereafter does some voluntary act such as asking for a continuance.¹⁵ If an appearance is in effect general the fact that the party recites that he appears specially, will not change the character of the appearance.¹⁶ After a general appearance a special appearance cannot be entered unless the general appearance is withdrawn by leave of court,¹⁷ or the

3. How Made.—a. Generally.—Parties in justices' courts may appear and act in person,¹⁹ or by attorney,²⁰ unless by law they are incompetent to do so, in which case provision is generally made for the appointment of a guardian ad litem.²¹

b. By Attorney.—Since justice's courts have no licensed attorneys as do courts of record, any person authorized by the party may act as his attorney,²² except the constable by whom the summons or jury process was served or such other persons as may be prohibited by statute.²³ If the authority of the attorney is not questioned, proof thereof need not be made,²⁴ as the opposing party is deemed to have admitted the authority and is held to have waived the right to object thereto.²⁵ Proof must be made, however, if the authority²⁶ is ques-

5. Withdrawal of Appearance.—Where a justice of the peace has acquired jurisdiction over the person of the defendant by his appearance, a withdrawal of his appearance by the defendant will not defeat the jurisdiction of the court unless made by leave of court,⁴⁵ which must first be obtained by proper application to the court,⁴⁶ on notice to the plaintiff or his attorney.⁴⁷ A withdrawal will usually be granted where the appearance has been entered through fraud or mistake,⁴⁸ or where it is unauthorized.⁴⁹ If the justice at the request of an appearing attorney erases his appearance from the docket, he cannot then proceed to try or determine the case without notice to the party or such attorney.⁵⁰

H. ARREST AND BAIL.⁵¹—The statutes of some states provide for procuring the appearance of the defendant by warrant of arrest under certain circumstances set forth in the several statutes,⁵² which must be shown to exist by oath or affidavit.⁵³ The warrant of arrest must contain the names of the parties,⁵⁴ a statement of a cause of action within the jurisdiction of the justice,⁵⁵ and if founded on a penal statute a reference to such statute,⁵⁶ and it must direct the officer to take the defendant and forthwith bring him before the justice.⁵⁷ It is not necessary that a warrant issuing from a justice of the peace should bear a seal.⁵⁸ The warrant may be served by any indifferent person specially deputized for such purpose.⁵⁹ The defendant is entitled to be discharged upon giving a sufficient bond,⁶⁰ where the warrant is vacated upon showing the nonexistence of the grounds on which it issued,⁶¹ or where, after issuance of the order of arrest, the time of payment is extended.⁶²

I. ATTACHMENT. — 1. Generally.⁶³ — Although under some statutes a writ of attachment is an extraordinary process for the commencement of actions,⁶⁴ generally attachment is a provisional remedy ancillary to the action in which it is sued out.⁶⁵

[a] Use of Criminal Warrant. Where a party is proceeded against for a forfeiture of a penal statute which is enforceable only by civil action, the fact that the form of warrant in criminal cases is used will not deprive the justice of jurisdiction. Carter v. Dow, 16 Wis. 298, 317.

The right of attachment being purely statutory, the party seeking an attachment must follow the statute regulating the right.⁶⁶

If a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of the amount sued for the fact that the valuation of the attached property is in excess of his jurisdictional limitation, will not divest him of jurisdiction.⁶⁷

2. Causes of Action in Which Attachment May Issue.—Statutes sometimes prescribe and limit the causes of action in which attachments in a justice's court may be had.⁶⁸ Thus they allow attachments where the action is for the breach of a contract, express or implied.⁶⁹

3. Grounds for Attachment.—An attachment may issue from a justice's court as a general rule in those cases when it may issue from a court of record or general jurisdiction.⁷⁰ Thus an attachment may issue when it is shown by affidavit to the satisfaction of the justice

5. Affidavit or Oath.—a. Necessity of.—The statutes require proof by affidavit or oath of the facts justifying the issuance of an attachment as a condition precedent to the issuance of the writ. A compliance with this requirement is necessary to give the court jurisdiction to issue the writ.⁸² As a general rule, it is the legal sufficiency of the affidavit, not its truth which confers jurisdiction on the justice.⁸³

[c] "Satisfactory Proof."—Under a statute requiring satisfactory proof of the ground before issuance of the writ, proof as used in the act means legal evidence or such evidence as would be received in the ordinary cause of judicial proceedings. [a] Existence of Facts Essential. But under a statute providing for the issuance of an attachment upon the filing of an affidavit stating certain facts, and an amendment authorizing the filing of a new affidavit containing "allegations of facts existing at the time of making the former affidavit," the jurisdiction of the justice depends not on the preliminary showing, but the actual existence of those facts. [a] Construction of Affidavit To Give Jurisdiction.—Where an affidavit for an attachment issued by a justice is such that the justice might so construe it as to give him jurisdiction, the attachment cannot be held void in collateral proceedings. Ketchum v. Vidrard, 4 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 138. See also Skinnion v. Kelley, 18 N. Y. 355; Van Alstyne v. Erwine, 11 N. Y. 331; Miller v. Brinkerhoff, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 118, 47 Am. Dec. 242; Kissock v. Grant, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 144.

[b] Although informal, if it contains enough to satisfy the justice of the facts authorizing the warrant, the justice has jurisdiction and the attachment is not subject to collateral attack. Bascom v. Smith, 31 N. Y. 595; Kissock v. Grant, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 144.

Co., 37 Wis. 344; Blackwood v. Jones, 27 Wis. 498; Elliott v. Jackson, 3 Wis. 649.

[a] An omission to allege that the debt was "due upon a contract, ex-

mand.⁹⁰ and, in some states, that the property to be attached is not exempt.⁹¹ It must appear on the face of the affidavit that it was made by plaintiff,⁹² or by some person in his behalf,⁹³ although this has been held unnecessary where such fact is disclosed by the record.⁹⁴

Grounds.—In addition thereto, the affidavit must state the ground or grounds relied on for the issuance of the attachment.⁹⁵ The plaintiff may state as many statutory grounds as he chooses, if he states them in the conjunctive and if he sustains any one of them, the writ press or implied," renders the affidavit void. Blackwood v. Jones, 27 Wis. 498.

[b] The nature of the claim (1) should be stated with some legal definiteness. If the affidavit merely states it is "for professional services rendered by the plaintiff," it is insufficient. Kesler v. Lapham, 46 W. Va. 293, 33 S. E. 289. (2) The words "the nature of plaintiff's claim" mean an account, note or judgment, or a like description of the nature of the claim. An allegation that it is for goods sold and delivered is insufficient. Driscoll v. Kelly, 4 Ohio Dec. 124, 5 Ohio N. P. 243. (3) But an allegation stating that the defendant is indebted to plaintiff in a certain sum for work, labor and services done and performed by him at his special instance and request is a sufficient showing that the cause of action is on contract express or implied. Ruthe v. Green Bay & M. R. Co., 37 Wis. 344.

[c] In an action founded on contract it is not necessary to specify in the affidavit for an attachment whether the claim is on a contract express or implied. Freer v. Hamilton, 127 Mich. 381, 86 N. W. 824.

[a] Form.—An affidavit stating that the defendant was "indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $100, as near as may be, over and above all legal set-offs," follows the language of the statute and is sufficient. Oliver v. Town, 28 Wis. 328, 334. See Baumgardner v. Dowagiac Mfg. Co., 50 Minn. 381, 52 N. W. 964, holding the affidavit to be in substantial compliance with the statute.

[a] Where There Are Several Plaintiffs.—If an affidavit shows that the person making it is one of several plaintiffs and does not show who the others are, it is void. Burnside v. Davis, 65 Mich. 74, 31 N. W. 619.

[a] An allegation in substantial compliance with the statute is required. If the affidavit does not state that a defendant about to remove permanently out of the state "refuses to will issue,⁹⁶ but if he states the grounds in the alternative, his affidavit is indefinite and void.⁹⁷ It is sometimes required that the facts and circumstances tending to prove the grounds set forth, be stated,⁹⁸ but this is not necessary under other statutes.⁹⁹ The facts and circumstances must be stated positively, not on information and belief.¹

Fact of Filing.—As the docket and transcript are required to show the proceedings in the case,² the affidavit need not show that it was filed in the justice's court.³

pay or secure the debt due the plaintiff," as provided by statute, it is insufficient. Upp v. Neuhring, 127 Iowa 713, 104 N. W. 350.

[b] A showing of a ground as existing long antecedently is insufficient. Kesler v. Lapham, 46 W. Va. 293, 33 S. E. 289.

[c] Belief.—Where the statute requires deponent to swear that he "knows or has good reason to believe," he must depose to facts and belief so that if he swears to good reasons, he must also swear he believes them. Anonymous, 2 Mich. N. P. 118.

[d] If the defendant is an absconding debtor, the affidavit must state that he was a resident of the state. Dickinson v. Barnes, 3 Gill (Md.) 485.

[e] Omission of Word "Not." Where the ground of attachment is that the defendant is a nonresident, the omission of the word "not" in the averment that "he has not resided in the state for one month, etc.," will render the affidavit a nullity. Freer v. White, 91 Mich. 74, 51 N. W. 807.

[f] Intent To Defraud.—Where attachment is sought on the ground that the defendant has departed the county with intent to defraud his creditors the affidavit is insufficient unless the plaintiff states that the departure was made by defendant with the intent to defraud his creditors. Colver v. Van Valen, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 102; Kelly v. Archer, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 68.

obligations. It must be taken, by the justice issuing the process,¹⁴ must be under seal where bonds are required to be sealed,¹⁵ and all blanks must be filled before filing the same.¹⁶

Irregularities, in the form of the bond, or in the number of sureties, will not be fatal to a judgment subsequently rendered,¹⁷ and an attachment will not be quashed because of the insufficiency of the bond given unless the plaintiff declines, on opportunity afforded, to substitute a sufficient bond.¹⁸

c. Amendment.—An attachment bond is amendable with the consent of the sureties as to nonjurisdictional defects,¹⁹ and when the plaintiff has obtained leave to file an amended bond, and does so, it will be considered as having been filed from the commencement of the suit.²⁰ Statutes sometimes expressly allow the filing of a new bond if that given is defective or insufficient.²¹

order that the court may determine whether his acts constitute an attachment. A description of the property attached, serving to identify it, must be given either in the return or in an annexed schedule,⁷⁶ and where service other than personal is had, facts and circumstances warranting such service,⁷⁷ and showing a full compliance with the statute,⁷⁸ must be stated. The return need not be verified by the officer making it,⁷⁹ and it may be amended so as to conform to the facts.⁸⁰ When made, the return is conclusive upon the parties so that if a compliance with the law is shown, the justice will have jurisdiction even though it may be false.⁸¹

13. Attachment Lien.—By a sufficient levy of a writ of attachment properly issued, a lien upon the property is created which is subject to all existing valid liens,⁸² but which is lost or terminated by

[b] If the claim having a privilege is in excess of the justice's jurisdiction, the creditor may protect himself in the district court by enjoining the officer from proceeding with the execution of the attachment or by a rule to show cause why he should not be paid by preference out of the proceeds of the attached property. *Shiff & Co. v. 14. The Action.—a. Pleading.—The general rules governing pleadings before a justice of the peace apply to attachment proceedings before him.⁹² In some jurisdictions it is necessary that a complaint be filed before the issuance of an attachment,⁹³ but in others a declaration or complaint in attachment suits in a justice's court need not be filed,⁹⁴ or the affidavit will serve the purpose of both an affidavit and complaint.⁹⁵ A failure of the defendant to avail himself by plea before the justice or on appeal, of matters in abatement of the attachment proceeding, amounts to a confession of the grounds of attachment.⁹⁶

b. Trial.—The general rules relating to trials in justice's courts obtain in attachment proceedings.⁹⁷

c. *Judgment and Execution.*⁹⁸—Before a judgment can be rendered on service other than personal, it must appear that the statutory requirements have been complied with, unless the defendant enters a general appearance.⁹⁹ The judgment, when property is attached, and there has been no personal service or appearance, will be in rem and not in personam,¹ although in some jurisdictions a judgment personal in form, may be rendered, which will be limited, in its effect, to the action to judgment.²⁵ In either case, the lien of the attachment is dissolved and it becomes the duty of the attaching officer to return the property to the defendant,²⁶ unless the plaintiff appeals from the judgment of dissolution, which appeal will operate as a supersedeas.²⁷

16. Third Party Claims.²⁸—Statutes generally allow third persons who claim the property attached or an interest therein to come into the attachment suit to assert their rights.²⁹ In pursuing these remedies, the statutes must be strictly complied with.³⁰ Some statutes provide for an intervention by the claimant,³¹ and some authorize the officer serving attachment process to summon a jury to try the right of property on the filing of a claim to the attached property,³² but he cannot do so if the statute does not give him such authority.³³

Jurisdiction.—The court issuing the attachment has jurisdiction to determine the right of property even though the value of the attached property exceed the justice's jurisdiction.³⁴ If the intervention proceedings are equitable in their nature, however, the justice has no jurisdiction,³⁵ and under some statutes the claimant may be entitled to remove his claim to a higher court for determination by a jury.³⁶

tervention, any person claiming an interest in the property attached may interpose his claim³⁷ at any time prior to the trial of the main action,³⁸ and in some jurisdictions at any time before final judgment or appeal.³⁹ And a subsequent attaching creditor, claiming under a valid attachment,⁴⁰ may attack the validity of a prior attachment.⁴¹

Forthcoming Bond. — Statutes sometimes allow the third party claimant to obtain possession of the attached property by giving a forthcoming bond conditioned as provided in the statute,⁴² but he cannot obtain possession thus where the statute makes no provision therefor.⁴³

Issues, Verdict, and Judgment. — The only issue in intervention proceedings is whether or not the attached property belongs to the intervenor.⁴⁴ The verdict rendered must conform to the issue,⁴⁵ and the judgment must conform to the verdict,⁴⁶ and any requirements prescribed by the statute.⁴⁷

Appeal. — An intervenor may appeal from a judgment rendered against him in the intervention proceeding,⁴⁸ but an appeal by the defendant in the main case alone gives the intervenor no right to question the correctness of the judgment against him.⁴⁹

17. Actions on Bonds. — After defeat of a plaintiff who wrongfully sued out an attachment, the defendant may treat the process as void and sue in trespass,⁵⁰ or waive the irregularity, and sue on the bond.⁵¹ On the breach of a forthcoming bond running to the officer, the plaintiff cannot maintain an action thereon until it has

18. Wrongful Attachment.—Where the proceedings in attachment are void, the plaintiff is a trespasser ab initio,⁵⁶ and the defendant may bring an action of conversion,⁵⁷ or trespass.⁵⁸ Sometimes an action in the nature of an action for malicious prosecution is brought,⁵⁹ in which it will be necessary to allege the facts required in such an action, such as a termination of the attachment proceedings adversely to the present defendant,⁶⁰ malice and want of probable cause.⁶¹ If the action is founded upon the wrongful and vexatious suing out of a foreign attachment, the jurisdiction of the justice who issued the attachment must be shown,⁶² and the defendant must be connected with the levy.⁶³ And in order to recover more than nominal damages, the plaintiff must allege and prove the non-return of the property or other damage suffered by him.⁶⁴ In pleading jurisdiction of the court to issue the attachment in justification, the defendant must plead facts on which such jurisdiction depends.⁶⁵

J. GARNISHMENT.⁶⁶—1. Nature of Remedy.—Garnishment proceedings are purely statutory and can be resorted to only when authorized by the statute.⁶⁷ A garnishment proceeding, when once

begun, constitutes in a limited sense, a suit,⁶⁸ ancillary to the main action,⁶⁹ and having for its purpose the attaching of credits, effects, debts, etc., of the defendant which are in the possession or under the control of a third person, as security for any judgment the plaintiff may recover against the defendant.⁷⁰

2. Time When Proceeding May Be Instituted.⁷¹ — It is sometimes provided that garnishment proceedings may be had whenever an action has been commenced by summons or attachment.⁷² Other statutes, however, require that a valid attachment must have been issued,⁷³ and that a valid judgment be rendered against the principal defendant,⁷⁴ or that a valid execution be issued and returned nulla bona.⁷⁵

3. Who May Be Summoned as Garnishees.⁷⁶ — Statutes generally provide that any person, firm or corporation having in their hands or under their control, property, money, effects, or credits of the principal defendant, are subject to garnishment.⁷⁷

b. Affidavit.—The person asking for garnishment process is sometimes required to file an affidavit in compliance with the statute;⁸² but some statutes do not require it.⁸³

The affidavit filed must be in substantial conformity to the statutory requirements,⁸⁴ and state facts authorizing the garnishment,⁸⁵ the amount of the plaintiff's claim against the defendant over and above all offsets,⁸⁶ and that affiant has good reason to believe⁸⁷ that the person to be summoned as garnishee is indebted to the defendant or has personal property of the defendant not exempt from execution, in his possession or under his control.⁸⁸

The affidavit cannot be traversed under some statutes.⁹⁰

c. Bond. — A bond or undertaking is sometimes required by the statute.⁹¹

6. Process and Service Thereof.⁹² — a. In General. — In order to confer jurisdiction upon a justice of the peace in garnishment proceeding, it is necessary to summon the garnishee to appear and answer at the time and place prescribed by law.⁹³ In some jurisdictions, the garnishee summons must be issued by the justice before whom the original suit is brought;⁹⁴ but in others, it is issued by the officer having the principal summons or attachment.⁹⁵ The writ must comply with the statute,⁹⁶ and must be directed to the proper officer for

[a] The Summons and Notice to a Garnishee Perform a Twofold Service. The summons is to bring him into court. This is essential to give the court jurisdiction over the person of the garnishee. The notice by which the officer is required to declare to the gar-nishee that he attaches in his hands, etc., is the means by which the thing (property or debt) is brought into court and is the indispensable prerequisite to confer jurisdiction over the subject-matter. Swallow v. Duncan, 18 Mo. App. 622.

95. Nylan v. Renhard, 10 Colo. App. 46, 49 Pac. 266 (the garnishee summons in a proceeding in aid of attachment is the notice left with the garnishee that the debts of the defendant are attached; this does not give the court jurisdiction over the garnishee); Steen v. Norton, 45 Wis. 412.

[a] In Wisconsin, the affidavit is delivered by the plaintiff to the officer having the principal summons, who thereupon issues his process reciting the affidavit and summoning the garnishee to appear before the justice, and returns the affidavit and summons to him. The summons is not strictly a judicial process, but is technically a warning order only. Steen v. Norton, 45 Wis. 412.

service, and must be served by such officer.⁹⁷ A valid service of the garnishment process is necessary,⁹⁸ and it must be made in accordance with the rules governing service of process generally.⁹⁹ Some statutes require the officer to seize the property, or take a forthcoming bond from the garnishee.¹

b. Notice to the Principal Defendant.—Under some statutes notice of the garnishment must be served on the principal defendant either in person or by publication;² and where required by statute, the notice must be in accordance with the statutory provisions, and must appear in the record of the justice.³

7. Garnishment Lien. — Garnishment being a species of attachment, service of the summons creates a lien,⁹ which differs, however, from that of an attachment in that in the former the possession of the property is undisturbed generally and the garnishee stands liable to the plaintiff for the custody of the property, while in the latter, the plaintiff obtains a lien upon the thing itself;¹⁰ or in other words, by

of service (Jarrell v. Guann, 105 Ga. 139, 31 S. E. 149), (2) but if the justice's court acts within ten days after service, the summons must be made returnable to the next justice's court thereafter. National Bank of Brunswick v. Pritchard, 4 Ga. App. 46, 61 S. E. 841.

(3) Where a corporation is summoned as garnishee, the answer must be made either by one of its servants, or agents, who has actual knowledge of the state of its dealings with the defendant, or by an officer of the corporation to whom such knowledge will be imputed by law. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Dickerson, 15 Ga. App. 293, 82 S. E. 942.

[c] In Alabama the person answering on behalf of the corporation must explicit as to its statements.¹⁸ When the answer or examination is oral, the justice is required to take minutes of the examination,¹⁹ or reduce it to writing,²⁰ and file the same with other papers in the case.²¹

Remedy for Absence of or Unsatisfactory Answer.—If the garnishee fails to appear,²² or if he appears and answers and his disclosure is not satisfactory to the plaintiff,²³ the plaintiff may, under some statutes, proceed against him by action in his own name,²⁴ or the garnishee may be proceeded against by attachment as for contempt,²⁵ or a default judgment may be rendered against him.²⁶

Effect of Appearance by Garnishee.—An appearance by the garnishee will operate as a waiver of defects and irregularities, in the proceedings against himself;²⁷ but his appearance can, in no way, operate to cure jurisdictional defects affecting the subject-matter of the garnishment proceedings,²⁸ or defects in the main action.²⁹

*e. Judgment or Order Against Garnishee.*³⁷ — (I.) Manner of Charging Garnishee. — In some jurisdictions, the court on finding against the garnishee renders an ordinary judgment against him.³⁸ But in other jurisdictions the statutes have provided various methods of charging the garnishee;³⁹ thus instead of rendering a judgment against the garnishee, he is sometimes ordered to pay the money into court;⁴⁰ this order is not enforceable by execution, and if the garnishee fail to comply with it, the plaintiff's only remedy is by action.⁴¹

(II.) When Judgment Rendered. — The time of rendition of judgment against the garnishee is regulated by statutes,⁴² which generally require that final judgment be first rendered in the main action,⁴³ even rendered. Field v. Peel, 122 Ga. 503, 50 S. E. 346.

(III.) Judgment or Order on Default. — Except in those jurisdictions where no judgment can be rendered against a garnishee,⁴⁹ the statutes generally provide that if the garnishee fail to appear at the proper time, or appearing, fail to make full answer to the interrogatories, a default judgment for the amount of the plaintiff's claim against the defendant and costs may be rendered against him;⁵⁰ but in some jurisdictions, on the rendition of judgment against the defendant, the justice issues a summons to the absent garnishee requiring him to show cause why judgment should not be rendered against him,⁵¹ or renders a conditional judgment only against him.⁵²

[a] How Amount of Judgment Determined.—Where a judgment has been entered against a defendant in garnishment proceeding in a justice's court, the justice will look to such judgment in determining the amount of the judgment to be rendered against the garnishee. Morrison v. Hilburn, 126 Ga. 114, 54 S. E. 938.

[b] The garnishee cannot defeat the default judgment by an appeal to a jury (1) in the justice court and there filing an answer denying indebtedness to the defendant. Davis v. Rhodes, 112 Ga. 106, 37 S. E. 169. (2) But see Boozer v. Fuller, 88 Ga. 295, 14 S. E. 615, holding that an appeal to a justice's jury does lie; but in this case the garnishee filed an answer and the default was granted on his failure to produce books and papers.

(IV.) Judgment Upon Answer or Disclosure. — If it appear from the answer of the garnishee when no issue is made thereon,⁵³ or from the finding of the court or jury on such issue,⁵⁴ that the garnishee is indebted to the defendant, the justice is required by statutes in some states to order him to pay the money into court, and if he does not do so at the time ordered, to render judgment against him.⁵⁵ Under other statutes, he is required to render judgment against him immediately.⁵⁶ In some jurisdictions, the garnishee is summoned to show cause why judgment should not be rendered against him.⁵⁷

Although one answer of a garnishee may authorize more than one judgment,⁵⁸ one judgment cannot be rendered upon two or more executions returned nulla bona, notwithstanding they may be at the instance of the same plaintiff against the same original defendant.⁵⁹

(V.) Form of Judgment.⁶⁰ — A judgment in favor of the plaintiff may be in his name against the garnishee,⁶¹ or it may be against the garnishee in favor of the principal defendant, to the use of the plaintiff.⁶² It should show whether it was entered for neglect or refusal of the garnishee to answer interrogatories, or for default of appearance, or upon his answer or on a verdict,⁶³ and in all the latter cases, it should be entered specially.⁶⁴

(VI.) Amount of Judgment. — Some statutes prescribe a minimum amount for which judgment against the garnishee may be rendered,⁶⁵ and a judgment cannot be rendered for an amount exceeding the jurisdiction of the justice.⁶⁶

(VII.) Effect of Judgment and Order. — The rendition of a judgment against the garnishee perfects the inchoate lien created by the garnishment process,⁶⁷ and substitutes the plaintiff as the creditor instead of the defendant.⁶⁸ So long as it is unreversed, it is conclusive as between the garnishee and the defendant,⁶⁹ and as conclusively determines the liability of the garnishee and the rights of the plaintiff as if it had been rendered in an ordinary suit inter partes.⁷⁰

The order that the garnishee pay the money into court which is rendered in some states, is not a final judgment,⁷¹ but amounts merely to an assignment of the claim from the original creditor, the defendant in the main action to the plaintiff in such action.⁷²

some future day,⁷³ even if the garnishee consents thereto.⁷⁴ But he may set aside a default judgment against a garnishee and grant a new trial.⁷⁵

(IX.) Equitable Relief Against.⁷⁶ — A garnishee may resort to equity to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment against him if it is void,⁷⁷ or has been obtained by fraud, mistake, accident, or the like.⁷⁸ A party who controverts the garnishee's answer has a remedy by appeal from a judgment which is not void and he cannot therefore obtain an injunction.⁷⁹

(X.) Enforcement of Judgment.⁸⁰ — A judgment against a garnishee may be enforced by execution.⁸¹ If the property has been delivered into court on the order of the justice, a judgment in favor of the plaintiff will be satisfied by the sale of such property or so much as is necessary to satisfy the judgment.⁸²

(XI.) Costs and Fees.⁸³ — Statutes sometimes allow the garnishee fees for his attendance;⁸⁴ but in the absence of a statute authorizing it, a garnishee cannot recover costs in garnishment proceedings before a justice of the peace;⁸⁵ nor can he be charged with the costs of the main action.⁸⁶
